Democratic Chiefs Arrive To Name City For Conclave

Third Term Issue Monopolizes Minds; Convention After G. O. P. Is Favored

Members of the Democratic National Committee, beset by the third-term issue and the definite conservative-liberal cleavage within the party, gathered here last night to select, today, the party convention city and possibly, though improbably, the date.

Mayor Edward J. Kelly, of Chicago, and National Committeeman Patrick A. Nash, of Illinois, were pulling for selection of Chicago for the convention, though they were silent on the amount of money the city would offer for the honor.

Pressing Philadelphia's claim was an 83-member group headed by Senator Joseph F. Guffey, Oliver S. Quayle, Mayor Robert E. Lamberton, John B. Kelly, chairman of the Democratic City committee, and Albert M. Greenfield, chairman of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce committee sponsoring the trip. Last reports were that Philadelphia expected to be able to offer the National committee $150,000 for the nominating convention.

West Coast Bid Expected

A surprise bid by San Francisco was rumored, and New York asked for the big gathering through the Smaller Business Association of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut.

General expectation continued that the National committee would leave to a subcommittee a decision on the date, in order that the convention may be held after the Republican gathering. The G. O. P. National committee will meet here February 16 to arrange its own summer conclave.

Greatest interest among the Democratic leaders last night centered on the Saturday action of Kelly and Nash in filing petitions to place President Roosevelt's name on the Illinois preferential ballot at the April 9 primary.

None professed to know what Mr. Roosevelt's private reaction to the step had been, and the President maintained silence at his Hyde Park home.

Unless Mr. Roosevelt withdraws his name by February 24 the question of placing it on the ballot will be decided by the State certifying board early in March, since the petitions were not accompanied by the customary certificate of candidacy, signed by the President. There appeared little doubt that the certifying board would place the name on the ballot in the absence of a formal withdrawal by Mr. Roosevelt.

Illinois "Wants Roosevelt"

Backers of Vice President Garner and Security Administrator Paul V. McNutt, two active presidential candidates, expressed little interest in when the convention is held.

Nash favored meeting after the G. O. P. convention, nd added:

"The people of Illinois want Roosevelt."

"Do you believe the people of Illinois will vote for a man without knowing whether he will accept the nomination or even is a candidate?" he was asked.

"They'll vote for Roosevelt," Nash replied. "The people will vote for him regardless of whether he gives his consent before the convention."

"Is your candidate willing?"

"I don't know."

Kelly declared the President "is our only candidate and we have no second choice."

The two Illinois leaders suggested holding the convention in late August or early September, and Senator Pepper, of Florida, agreed. Con-

Early Pardon Assured For Edith Maxwell

Copyright, 1940, by The Washington Post

Richmond, Va., Feb. 4.—Edith Maxwell, the mountain school teacher who was sent to prison for 20 years for slaying her blacksmith-father, Trigg Maxwell, of The Pound, will be pardoned before James H. Price leaves the Governor's Mansion.

This was learned today from a source of unquestioned reliability.

While the Governor has not yet made up his mind when to intervene in the celebrated case of the girl twice convicted of murder, it was also learned on reliable authority that Edith can expect pardon in the spring.

Gov. Price was out of the city and could not be reached for comment.

He was described, nevertheless, as being eager to "do something" for Edith Maxwell during his term of office which expires in 1941.

The Governor, it was said, has kept in close touch with the girl who once taught in a one-room school on Bold Camp Creek in the Cumberland Mountains, through authorities at the Virginia State Farm near Goochland.

Officials at the farm described Edith as not yet being ready for or wanting immediate freedom.

G.O.P. Flouts, First Lady Fetes Youth Session

Hamilton Cites Dies Charges; Law Makers Invited to Reception

John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, announced last night that he had refused to name a Republican to attend the February 11 session of the American Youth Congress here because the organization had failed to expel communistic elements.

A short time later the Youth Congress headquarters announced Mrs. Roosevelt would receive at the White House this evening a group of Senators and Representatives for a meeting with those planning the sessions.

Hamilton's Reasons

Hamilton, in reply to an invitation from Joseph Cadden, executive secretary of the Youth Congress, declared that "I do not mean in any way to reflect on the several very fine and really American organizations of youth affiliated" with the organization.

However, he added:

"Until the American Youth Congress purges itself of its communistic elements which, according to the Dies Committee, dominate it, I shall not request any Republican to attend a meeting of your organization.

"I would not personally participate in meetings of the American Youth Congress, as now constituted, and I would not ask another to do

Weather Oddity: Mercury Stays Above 32 All Day

Winter fell back a long step in Washington yesterday as the temperature stayed above the freezing point all day for the first time this year, and the weather man predicted the thaw would continue today.

Snow piles dwindled, side streets became streams, and East Potomac Park was opened to automobiles for the first time since January 24.

The mercury yesterday hung between 44 degrees and 32, the point where ice stays ice and water stays water. The last previous day with no freezing moments was December 26, 1939, the weather man reported.

Rains were expected in the night or this morning, with slightly colder temperatures.

Economy Cuts Peril Recovery, C.I.O. Contends

Bleak Outlook Is Forecast by Union In Trade Survey

Economy cuts by President Roosevelt and Congress in proposed expenditures for the next fiscal year were assailed by the C. I. O. yesterday as imperiling recovery.

As a Senate farm bloc prepared to undertake this week restoration of funds lopped from the Agriculture Department bill, the C. I. O.'s new publication, "Economic Outlook," pictured the economy drive as the major "depressing" factor in the 1940 business outlook.

Steel Decline Is Forecast

The pessimistic picture painted by the Lewis labor organization listed these other forecasts:

A "substantial" decline in steel production, which it said would come in the first quarter of 1940.

"Sharp declines in production and employment in the automobile industry, said to be "coming soon."

A "continuing decline" in orders for basic raw materials.

Failure of private investment to pick up.

The survey contended that the Federal budget played "the chief role among the depressing factors." Curtailment of the Government's contribution of purchasing power by reduction of WPA expenditures, the survey added, "will result in a sharp drop in consumers' expenditures."

On the other hand the Agriculture Department predicted that American farmers would receive a larger cash income during the early months of 1940 than in the same months last year.

Large quantities of agricultural produce was said to be moving into domestic consumption channels at prices averaging higher than a year ago.

Roosevelt Is Blamed

The department emphasized, however, that the purchasing power of farm products in terms of nonfarm goods and services continued below the pre-World War level. It is the goal of the department's farm programs to restore prices to a level which would give farm products purchasing power equal to the 1910-14 period.

The Commerce Department reported yesterday that total retail sales in 1939 were almost $38,000,000,000, a gain of 7 per cent over 1938.

The C. I. O. said that even the chambers of commerce and manu-

Honeymoon Plane Crash Kills Five

Desperate Pilot, Lost in Fog, Wrecks Craft Trying to Land in Marsh

By the Associated Press

Hammond, La., Feb. 4.—A honeymooning couple en route to New Orleans for the merry-making of Mardi Gras and three other persons were killed tonight when their plane, lost in a fog, crashed and burned after a desperate pilot tried to land it in a marsh.

The bodies were burned beyond recognition. The airplane was identified as one which left Denver this morning piloted by Don T. Craig.

Aboard were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Zimmerhackel, of Denver, married yesterday in Denver; the plane's owner, Mrs. Elizabeth McSweeney Powell, of Denver, and Michael Creed Hinderlinder, jr., son of the Colorado State engineer.

Failed to Talk Him In

The airways communications operator at the New Orleans airport, about 70 miles away, had tried vainly for more than an hour to "talk" the plane in.

J. B. Waldrop, a salesman of Slidell, La., said he was driving along United States highway 190 when he noticed the plane circling near Hammond.

A few minutes later, he said, the craft leveled off toward the ground, "hit several treetops which stripped its wings, the motor fell out and the people were strewn on the ground. Then there was a big flare and a fire."

Pilot "Getting Tired"

The New Orleans airport communications operator said "we were talking with him for more than an hour. He evidently didn't know where he was. He did tell us the weather was getting worse, and he was getting tired and was going to set it down."

The airport said the party was coming here after refueling at Fort Worth today.

W. F. Wilson, manager of the State Experiment Station near here, said he had viewed the wreckage and seen "three men and two women burned beyond recognition."

Residents and State police worked with flashlights to extricate the bodies.

All Noted in Colorado

Zimmerhackel, 56, was an attorney and a prominent Denver businessman. He was a candidate for the Republican nomination for the United States Senate several years ago.

Mrs. Zimmerhackel, 43, was the divorced wife of Erl Ellis, prominent Denver attorney, who was once charged with placing microphones in the governor's office. She is survived by her divorced husband and a son, Robert D. Ellis, a senior at the Colorado University Law School in Boulder.

Craig, 30, is survived by his widow and a son, Tommy, 2, both of Denver.

Mrs. Powell, a cousin of Zimmerhackel, was socially prominent here. Her divorced husband, Frederick, is a Denver investment broker.

Balkan States Agree to Stay Out of War

Four Powers Pledge Mutual Efforts to Promote Unity and Maintain Peace

Copyright by New York Times

Belgrade, Feb. 4.—The three-day meeting of the Balkan Entente council ended tonight with all indications pointing to the unanimous resolve on the part of the four member countries to keep peace in this part of Europe, to avoid entanglement in arguments of the Great Powers, and to try to patch up the outstanding problems of the region, at least on a temporary basis.

Following the final session of the conference, at which the phraseology of the concluding communique was reviewed, Rumanian Foreign Minister Gafencu summoned foreign correspondents to the foreign office where he read the council statement.

The Rumanian foreign minister appeared tired but happy at the result of the deliberations. At his side was Turkish Foreign Minister Saracoglu, who, from time to time, smiled at the photographers, and Greek Premier General Metaxas, who remained impassive throughout the proceedings. Yugoslav Foreign Minister Cincar-Markovic was at the right of the retiring president.

Points in Communique

The high points of the communique were:

1. That Yugoslavia, Rumania, Turkey and Greece are determined to maintain peace and order in southeastern Europe, and to continue the work of the entente, basing its objectives as a unit on the independence and national territorial rights of its members.

2. That the Entente countries wish to continue friendly relations with neighboring states and to develop them to improved levels in a mood of conciliation, mutual comprehension and faithful collaboration. This aim is specifically directed toward Hungary and Bulgaria.

3. In order to tighten the bonds of the Entente and presumably to assist in efforts to draw Sofia and Budapest toward this orbit, all efforts will be made to better economic ties and communication links in southeastern Europe, and to develop a system of commercial exchanges.

4. The Entente will be prolonged for seven years from the date of its scheduled expiration, thus keeping it effective, at least, until February 9, 1947.

Next Session in Athens

The four foreign ministers will remain in close contact with each other until the next regular session of the council in Athens next February.

After he had finished reading the communique, Gafencu delivered a short speech in which he emphasized the objectives of the Balkan pact and expressed the desire that it would become an increasingly useful instrument for the preservation of peace where it now pre-

1,000 Russians Slain In Big Push; Bombs Fire Chief Finn Port

Assault on Mannerheim Line Likened to Drive on Verdun

Russians Attack in Wave on Wave Against Traps and Wire Amid Shells; Gunfire, Planes Harry Finns Constantly

By K. J. Eskelund.

Helsinki, Feb. 4.—Communiques of the week contain only dry figures which present a poor picture of what is taking place along the Mannerheim Line. Only the sanguinary battles of Verdun and Ypres in the World War may be compared with this shell-shattered hell.

The Summa sector is a lakeless district of the Mannerheim Line, in front of which trees have been cut down over an area about 7 miles wide. As a consequence, the Finns here are almost hidden among trees while it is necessary for the Russians to cross a bare flatland to attack, their movements being visible over a range of about a mile.

Russian prisoners tell of the fear with which they start these attacks, after seeing hundreds of their comrades set off before them and never return. They are unable to see the Finnish lines while advancing in the bitter cold with bullets incessantly shrieking around them. Now and then the Finnish artillery concentrates a volley and everyone throws himself on the ground. When the survivors approach the Finnish lines the fire increases.

Giant tanks rolling in front of the attackers press the siege but see no Finns, knowing only that somewhere in the woods they are lying ready to kill.

The Mannerheim line has ridges everywhere overlooking all Russian movements. When a tank strikes a mine every one within a radius of ten yards is killed. Then the tanks are halted by tall pointed poles placed in front of the Finnish outposts.

Some of the Russian leaders, headed by subofficers, leap over these poles when their own planes power-dive over the forest. When the attackers reach a barbed-wire entanglement several yards deep, the Finnish machine guns open up on them. This fire is supplemented by hand grenades hurled from hidden trenches.

Finally the remnants of the Russian wave are forced to retreat.

Assault Stopped

By the Associated Press

Helsinki, Feb. 4.—Flames raged through the seaport of Turku tonight after a day of heavy bombing by Soviet warplanes, which also renewed attacks on Viipuri, at the head of the Gulf of Finland, and reduced the city's ancient cathedral to ruins.

The raids coincided with Finnish reports of fresh successes on land, in which the Russians were said to have lost more than 1,000 men in a futile attempt to break through the Karelian Isthmus defenses at Summa, 20 miles south of Viipuri. The Russians were also reported to have suffered "heavy losses" at Lake Muola on the Isthmus front.

Turku, Finland's ancient capital on the southwest coast, was bombed steadily throughout the afternoon. Details on the number of casualties were not immediately available.

Bombs Rain on Viipuri

At Viipuri, Soviet bombers roared to the attack shortly after dawn, and continued to rain explosives on the city far into the evening.

Numerous buildings, in addition to the cathedral, which was built in 1600, were reduced to ruins. The cathedral was famed for its stained glass windows, art treasures and great organ, which was one of the largest in Europe.

The Red Army, a Finnish communique said, attempted to pound through the Mannerheim Line along the Viipuri-Leningrad Railway, which runs between Summa and Lake Muola. The Russians were said to have lost nine tanks at Summa in four futile attacks.

Raiders Kill 40

Despite efforts of Finland's small air force to fight back, droves of Russian planes continued to keep the interior of Finland in a state of almost constant alarm, with 40 civilians officially reported killed in yesterday's raids.

Viipuri was heavily damaged in yesterday's raids, three squadrons of Red planes attacked Kuopio and 12 planes officially were reported to have killed 15, wounded 44 and destroyed 85 houses at Sortavala, a port on Lake Ladoga, Friday.

Eleven Russian planes were reported shot down.

Both the Finns and Russians blasted away along the Karelian Isthmus defense line with heavy artillery and the Finns asserted they had silenced several enemy batteries.

Red Supply Lines Hit

Northeast of Lake Ladoga, where heavy fighting has been reported within the last few weeks, only minor engagements were reported, but the Finns said their patrols were "successful against enemy supply lines." In this region two Russian divisions are virtually cut off and two others have been badly battered in almost continuous attacks on the Finnish lines.

Soviet planes roared over most of Finland yesterday, continuing attacks which have reduced sections of many cities and towns to fire-blackened wreckage.

The Finns said their own air force engaged in several battles, made reconnaissance flights and bombed Russian bases.

Britt Denies Diners Plotted Against Dies

They Just Discussed Politics at Ordinary Stag Party, He Says

Dr. Steuart Henderson Britt, of George Washington University, last night termed "absurd" charges that a "plot" against the chairman of the Dies Committee developed from the widely discussed Gardner Jackson dinner on January 19.

Dr. Britt, a guest at the dinner, issued his statement as Representative Dempsey (Democrat), of New Mexico, said the Committee had agreed informally to turn over to the Justice Department transcript of testimony concerning allegedly forged letters discussed at the dinner and later introduced into the House record.

The letters, which purportedly linked Chairman Dies, of Texas, with William Dudley Pelley, chief of the "Fascist" Silver Shirt Legion of America, were forged, the Committee has said, by David Mayne, of Washington for $105 of Jackson's money.

The letters later were introduced into the record by Representative Hook (Democrat), of Michigan, an opponent of the committee, who, following disclosure of the alleged forgeries, called for a grand jury investigation of all the circumstances.

Dr. Britt's statement, calling the charges of a "conspiracy" against Dies, "absurd and ridiculous," said:

"Ordinary Stag Dinner"

"I was one of several guests at the dinner, which was also attended by Representatives Ramspeck, of Georgia; Larrabee, of Indiana; Coffee, of Washington; Murdock, of Utah; Casey, of Massachusetts, and Hook, of Michigan . . .

"First of all, there is nothing strange about a group of Congress-

Adventists Form Medical Corps for War

Unit Permits Active Participation, Without Violating Objections

By Betty Ruth McDevitt

Seventh Day Adventists, conscientiously opposed to war in principle but realizing the possibility that the United States might become involved in hostilities, yesterday completed formation of a laymen's medical corps to permit non-combatant participation by members of the faith.

Adventist leaders explained they do not want their members to have to make a choice between being combatants or being branded as slackers.

Nearly 200 men already have been enrolled in a medical corps being formed under auspices of the Columbia Union Conference, with headquarters at Takoma Park, Md.

Second Boy Flown Off Smith Island For Appendectomy

Crisfield, Md., Feb. 4 (AP).—Ralph Brimer, 12, was flown from ice-locked Smith Island today for an emergency appendectomy in Mac-Ready hospital.

He drew a hospital bed alongside Harold Evans, 10, his playmate, flown by the same airplane from the same island eight days ago.

Both boys had ruptured appendices and are in critical condition, hospital attendants said. The Evans boy has peritonitis.

Fred Ennis, Salisbury pilot, made the flights after calls were sent by Smith Island's radio-telephone.

Snowballs in . . . Church

Poor Little Ducks Tuck Up Feet, Keep Swimming to Beat Cold

By Gladwin Hill
Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, Feb. 4.—Leap Year slipped into reverse gear last week.

A Rochester, N. Y., man advertised that he would marry any woman of good character "with financial standing," and a Wildwood, N. J., fisherman advertised that he would marry any girl with money enough to buy him a boat to fish in.

And, after Leap Year lapses, there came a serried army of screwball situations.

If, for instance, you thought that cold weather was tough on you, what about the ducks in Evansville, Ind., which, observers swore, kept swimming furiously for two weeks to keep their pond from freezing?

The ducks were a little smarter than a hen in Asheville, N. C., which stood on some damp ground too long and froze to it. All in all, Asheville animal life took a beating. A mouse there got so pre-occupied eating that his tail froze into a pan of water.

Other feats of the week: A Calexico, Calif., man made 30 parachute jumps in ten hours . . . The congregation of a York, S. C., church put out a fire by throwing snowballs on it . . . The mayor of Charleston, S. C., pulled out one of his teeth with a pair of pliers . . .

Things were pretty upset down in Buenos Aires. A swimming meet was called off on account of rain, and seven houses burned down while two fire companies squabbled about who was going to put out the fire!

Complaint Dept.: . . . The fire chief of Weatherford, Okla., demanded a new fire truck on the ground that the old one was always being passed en route to fires by boys on bicycles.

A man in Stanford-le-Hope, England, put a box of matches in his hip pocket—and started dancing the "Boomps-a-Daisy" . . . ! ! ! ! (It was a hot number!)

They Met, Loved, Wed in Day; She's a D. C. Schoolgirl, 16

A 16-year-old high school girl, sought by Maryland and District police yesterday, returned to the home of her grandfather here last night, as bride of a man she had met only the night before.

The girl, Marguerite Morrison, 16, of 1903 North Capitol street, had been intoduced Saturday night to Harry M. Key, 27, of Suitland, Md., an employe in the District Architect's Office.

To police, reporters, father and grandfather, all of whom gave the couple their blessings, they explained: "It was love at first sight."

Said Marguerite: "It seemed that I was in love with him all my life."

Marguerite, a pretty blonde, was with her father, William J. Morrison, in a hotel cafeteria, when Key strolled up. The father and Key were acquainted, and Morrison introduced his daughter. Later, Key offered to drive Marguerite to her grandfather's home, 1903 North Capitol street. Morrison assented.

En route, Key proposed, Marguerite accepted. They went on to Washington, Va., and were married by a Baptist minister.

Meanwhile, the grandfather, Matthew Schilz, asked police aid in finding his missing granddaughter. As police were checking with him for a third time late last night, Harry and Marguerite showed up and explained.

All was forgiven.

Marguerite has one problem to solve, however. A junior at McKinley High School, she isn't sure whether or not she will return to school.

Nazis Confess Polish Sights Make Them Want to 'Get Away'

Berlin, Feb. 4.—"Lublin—fire against the dwellings!" Twenty-seven Poles were placed against a wall and shot.

In cryptic sentences furloughed German soldiers are telling what is happening in German-occupied Poland. Some will not talk openly, but they do talk, and when one hears what those soldiers and young men of the labor service tell, one well understands why they confess they want to shake off the impressions brought back from Poland.

As more and more Germans return and talk of the "Arctic cold," pressing them, one learns that there exists something worse than cold—"Dumb submission by the Polish population, a graveyard atmosphere all over Poland; a fanatic, unextinguishable hatred gleaming from the eyes of those taken prisoner and placed against a wall for sabotage."

Oldtimers among policemen returning from Poland say:

"Only to get away! Are we to point a gun at the breast of every Polish civil servant to compel him to work!"

Travelers coming from the conquered Polish areas say they found it very difficult to get the Poles to describe the situation. The Poles seem mostly po- people it is as and hears it whispered that those without money might just as well

Green Urges Unemployment Needs Survey

A. F. of L. Leader Says Study of Situation Will Help Find Solution

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Feb. 4.—President William Green said today the American Federation of Labor would ask Congress to create a national advisory committee on unemployment as a step toward economic recovery.

Such a council, after examining the problem from various points of view, should be able to find some common ground and adopt a constructive program, he said. The Government, industry, labor and farmers would be represented.

Addressing an audience in the Tamiami Temple Methodist Church, the labor leader reiterated his plea that friction between Government and industry end and that business be given the "green light."

"The country today is suffering from a jittery state of mind," he declared. "Investors are frightened, business men are afraid to expand or increase their activity. Those in authority in our Government must get together with business and effect a lasting peace."

Rap at John Lewis

As the first step toward solving the unemployment problem, Green suggested a census to show which localities and industries had been hit the hardest, the extent of unemployment among youth and the middle aged, and the effect on employment of new, labor-saving machinery.

Obviously alluding to the recent statement by John L. Lewis, C. I. O. leader, that President Roosevelt would be defeated if he sought a third term, Green said:

"We have followed a traditional nonpartisan political policy . . . The American Federation of Labor makes no arbitrary demands. It does not engage in 'blitzkrieg' politics. People who throw bombshells, duds or otherwise, usually find them tossed back in their own faces. The American Federation of Labor keeps the friends it makes."

A. F. L. Group Deplores Taxes

Miami, Fla., Feb. 4.—A group of leaders of the American Federation of Labor made public here tonight the results of an economic survey of the last seven years, which held that the New Deal had increased taxation, forcing thousands of firms into the red, and had injured industry, finance and labor.

Signers of the statement included William L. Hutcheson and Matthew Woll, vice presidents; John Possehl, president of the International Union of Operating Engineers; John P. Coyne, president of the Building and Construction Trades department of the A. F. of L.; Robert Byron, president of the Sheet Metal Workers; Charles J. MacGowan, vice president of the Boilermakers; Joseph W. O'Neill, of the Distillery Workers; James J. Ryan, vice president of the Sheet Metal Workers; Roland Adams, member of the general executive board of the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, and J. R. Weyweyler, general representative of the carpenters.

C.I.O. Terms Cuts Recovery Threat

facturers associations know the slashes in relief and public works ordained by the House will, if carried through, bring "a recurrence of the industrial recession of 1937."

Blaming President Roosevelt for initiating the economy wave, the C. I. O. described the Congressional cuts as retaliation for severe budget slashes he inflicted on "pet" Congressional appropriations — rivers and harbers, public works and farm benefits.

Ralph Hetzel, C. I. O. unemployment director and editor of the "outlook," said the February average of 1,300,000 WPA jobs was "completely out of line with the needs of the unemployed," he said:

"Nothing less than a level of employment of 3,000,000 would begin to meet the needs of the unemployed. It is stupid to say otherwise."

The Associated Press reported Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, discussing the possibility of making only a part-year appropriation for relief in an effort to avoid raising taxes or increasing the national debt in this session of Congress.

Heavy Cuts to Be Needed

To accomplish this, Byrnes said, Congress would have to cut from $200,000,000 to $300,000,000 off President Roosevelt's estimates of expenditures.

Since the President said in his budget message that the Treasury could stay within the debt limit by a margin of $62,000,000 if an additional $460,000,000 in taxes were levied, a Congressional cut of $300,000,000 in prospective expenditures would leave only $100,000,000 to be raised by taxes or otherwise.

Faced with such a situation, Byrnes said it was his judgment there would be strong sentiment for a part-year appropriation of possibly $750,000,000 for WPA instead of the approximately $1,000,000,000 recommended by the President for the full year. Such a part-year appropriation would permit Congress to end this session within the debt limit.

Senator Adams (Democrat), Colorado, another economy advocate, declared, however, he would oppose any such procedure.

Time Has Come To Stop Guessing

Roosevelt After A Third Term, Asserts Landon

Says Drafting Failed But Political Power Is Bringing Shifts

By Merryle Rukeyser,
International News Service Staff Writer

Topeka, Kans., Feb. 4.—Alfred M. London, titular head of the Republican Party, in an interview today declared that the time had come to stop guessing about President Roosevelt's third-term aspirations. He made this observation after Mr. Roosevelt's name had been entered in the Illinois primary by the Cook County Democratic Committee.

The former Governor of Kansas, who was opposing candidate to Mr. Roosevelt in the last election, said:

"President Roosevelt is behaving like a candidate. Nothing that he has done recently has been inconsistent with candidacy. And what he does is more significant than what he says or what he abstains from saying.

Charges Use of Machine

"Recognizing that the earlier campaign to deify and then draft Roosevelt had failed to click, the President now appears to be using the power of his political machine to get the nomination. This is evidenced by the fact that numerous Democrats, who had previously expressed opposition to the principle of the third term, have recently been reversing themselves.

"This latest tendency surprises me because I thought that Mr. Roosevelt was a more astute politician. He ought to know that the very use of the power of his political machine to force his nomination will in itself lead to his defeat in the November election.

The discussion next turned to the question of what the Republican Party should do amidst the current national guessing contest.

Urges Immediate "Audit"

"In the circumstances," the former Governor observed, "the responsibility of the Republican Party is plain. The opposition should start out immediately to audit the New Deal record over a 7-year period. The Democratic Party cannot escape from this record, and must suffer the consequences of its muddleheadedness, its wastefulness, and its demonstrated failure to deliver the goods.

"At last the realities are catching up with the New Deal spenders. Roosevelt, Lehman (Gov. Lehman of New York), and the others are right smack up against debt limits and limits of endurance on the part of taxpayers. They must now decide whether to cut down Governmental services, raise taxes, or, in the case of the Federal Government, extend the legal debt limit. . . .

Fears Fourth, Fifth Terms

"If the Democratic National Committee when it meets tomorrow should defer the Democratic National Convention from June to July or August, such a move would make it easier for the President to violate the American tradition and become a candidate for a third term.

"On the other hand, the Republican opposition doesn't want a short campaign. It will require ample time and patience to expose the bunk and to point out the relationships between the follies of the New Deal to the backslide of living standards of the pepole. A long and sincere campaign of popular education is needed."

Queried about the third term issue, Mr. Landon remarked:

"If we depart from our American tradition of limiting a President to two terms, then there will be no barrier to prevent someone from fastening himself on the Government for indefinite periods. The issue is really whether we are to grant Mr. Roosevelt a third, fourth and fifth term. Make no mistake about that."

As to his own position in national affairs, he said:

"The country needs at least one man who isn't a candidate for any office. I enjoy the widespread recognition that I'm not office hungry."

Old Age Policy Pays up to $50 a Month!

Needed Protection, Ages 65 to 85, Costs Only 1 Cent a Day

The Postal Life & Casualty Insurance Co., 3002 Postal Life Building, Kansas City, Mo., has a new accident policy for men and women of ages 65 to 85.

It pays up to $500 if killed, up to $50 a month for disability, up to $25 a month for hospital care and other benefits that so many older people have wanted.

And the cost is only 1 cent a day —$3.65 a year!

Postal pays claims promptly; more than one-quarter million people have bought Postal policies. This special policy for older people is proving especially attractive. No medical examination—no agents will call.

Supreme Court May Rule on Price-Fixing

Whether States Can Set Production Cost Minima Is at Stake

By the Associated Press

A final decision may be delivered by the Supreme Court today on whether a State can pass legislation requiring that farmers be paid the cost of production.

The specific litigation involves constitutionality of a 1935 Florida law fixing minimum prices—based on the cost of production—at which citrus fruit could be purchased from the growers. A three-judge Federal court in Florida held the act unconstitutional.

Another case which may be decided involves validity of a National Labor Relations Board order directing the Waterman Steamship Corporation of Mobile, to offer reemployment, with back pay, to a group of seamen discharged after changing their membership from an American Federation of Labor affiliate to a C. I. O. union.

The Fifth Federal Circuit Court ruled for the company, holding that it was a "victim" of a fight for supremacy between the Federation and the C. I. O.

Associate Justice Frank Murphy will begin his service on the court today—the fifth member President Roosevelt has named to the nine-man tribunal.

This will bring the court to its full nine-man strength for the first time since May 29.

The former Attorney General, just back from a Florida vacation, will become eligible to participate in the court's business as soon as he takes the oath. This will be administered by Charles Elmore Cropley, the clerk.

cededly, the Republicans would be unable to meet so late, in view of their need to organize their campaign from scratch.

Pepper and Senator Murray, of Montana, pictured the third-term sentiment as increasing steadily.

Atlanta, Feb. 4 (AP).—A rival delegation to the Democratic National Convention, chosen "by the people" of Georgia, was promised today by friends of Vice President John Nance Garner if the State Democratic executive committee undertakes to name uninstructed delegates.

Challenging opposition of Gov. E. D. Rivers and other Georgia party chiefs to a preferential primary as "a plan to deliver Georgia to Roosevelt," Edgar B. Dunlap said advocates of a State-wide vote would carry their fight to "every county in Georgia."

Dunlap, chairman of the self-styled Presidential Preference Primary Committee and a spokesman for anti-New Deal forces in Georgia, asserted his group would "hold mass meetings in every county in Georgia and elect delegates to a State convention, and let them name delegates to go to the national convention."

Rivers has advocated an uninstructed delegation.

Other third-term comment included:

John P. Erickson, Minnesota: "The President hasn't taken a stand and I don't see why I should until he has spoken."

Charles E. Broughton, Wisconsin: "We're for a third term in Wisconsin."

Scott Ferris, Oklahoma: "Roosevelt can get more votes than all the other candidates put together."

Charles Sawyer, Ohio: "I will support the President if he runs. There is tremendous sentiment for him in Ohio."

It was announced yesterday that Representative Clarence Cannon, of Missouri, had been chosen for the fifth time as parliamentarian of the national convention. He is author of "Cannon's Precedents" on House procedure. Cannon was selected by Democratic National Chairman James A. Farley, who will preside at today's meeting of the national committee.

The Ghost Walks: To Get a Bowl of Finnish Soup

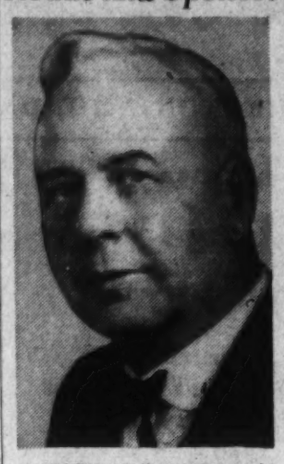
Helsinki, Feb. 4 (U.P.).—A wounded Finnish soldier today offered this anecdote:

While on patrol duty he noticed a Russian soldier playing possum amid corpses in the snow.

"This Russian looks like he's dead; let's go get some soup," the Finnish soldier remarked loudly to his companions—in Russian.

"Me, too," yelled the corpse, jumping to his feet and following the Finnish patrol to a soup kitchen.

Rep. Dowell Dies; Roads Aid Sponsor



CASSIUS C. DOWELL

Rep. Dowell, Of Iowa, Dies Here at 75

Fathered Program Of Federal Aid For Road System

Representative Cassius C. Dowell, Republican dean of the Iowa Congressional delegation and father of the Federal-Aid Highway System Act, died yesterday at his apartment in Hotel Dodge, 20 E street northwest. He was 75, and was serving his twelfth term in Congress.

The Iowan's death was the twenty-third among members of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

Mrs. Belle Riddle Dowell, his wife and sole survivor, was at Representative Dowell's bedside when he passed away at 10:45 a. m., succumbing to a heart ailment after a week's illness.

Active in many floor fights in his 24 years' service in the lower chamber, Representative Dowell was proudest of his work in laying the foundation for a system of encouraging highway construction through Federal grants.

He was chairman of the House Roads Committee, which drafted the highways bill in 1921, and he reported the proposed legislation to the House.

Recently Mr. Dowell recalled the strategy by which the law was passed.

"There was strong opposition to it particularly from the Eastern States, which already had a good many hard roads," he said.

"The bill was adopted in the House following a hard floor fight by getting it attached as amendment to an unrelated bill sent to the House by the Senate."

The Iowan, who served continuously from 1915, except when the Democratic tide replaced him for one term in 1933, worked consistently for agricultural legislation.

During the last regular session he actively supported the $225,000,000 appropriation for farm parity payments and an increased appropriation to permit the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation to buy more farm products.

A native of Warren County, Iowa, he attended Baptist College, in Des Moines, Simpson College, at Indianola, Iowa, and Drake University, Des Moines, where he received both liberal arts and law degrees.

Admitted to the bar in 1888, Mr. Dowell practiced law at Des Moines; served in the Iowa House for four years and was elected speaker pro tempore; served in the State Senate for ten years, until elected to Congress from the Sixth District in 1915.

During his current term in the House, Representative Dowell was a member of the Roads and Territories committees.

He was a member of the Loyal Order of Moose, Modern Woodmen of America, Maccabees, Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Masons, Grotto, Consistory, Mystic Shrine, Delta Theta Phi, Phi Beta Kappa, and University Church of Christ.

Funeral services will be held at Des Moines Wednesday. A Congressional deleggation will accompany the body to Iowa.

45 Turks Killed In New Quake

Ankara, Turkey, Feb. 4 (AP).—Forty-five persons were reported killed and scores injured by an earthquake in the night, which destroyed two villages in Erzincan, northeastern Turkey.

The Erzincan region bore the brunt of December's earthquake, which together with severe weather and floods, killed more than 30,000.

Successor Says He'll Follow Borah's Lead

John Thomas Arrives To Take Senate Seat; Strict Isolationist

By International News Service

United States foreign policy is leading the Nation "directly into the maelstrom of war," Senator-designate John Thomas (Republican), of Idaho, said here yesterday, upon arrival to fill the unexpired Senate term of the late Senator Borah.

In an interview Thomas pledged stanch adherence to the isolationist policies of his predecessor. He said:

"I shall continue Senator Borah's isolationist policies as best I can. I whole-heartedly agree with him that this Nation must keep out of entangling alliances and out of foreign wars.

"The way to keep out of war is to keep American money at home. I feel that the American people are tremendously interested in our foreign relations and the international situation, and that they are incontrovertibly opposed to entrance in this or any other war."

Thomas is 66, eight years Borah's junior. He declared he would also carry forward Borah's opposition to renewal of the reciprocal trade agreement program upon its present terms, which do not require Senate ratification of the treaties. Of the program, fostered by the Administration, he said:

"It is slowly destroying the American farmer. It is not so much what it has already done, as what it is proposed it shall do if extended, particularly in Latin-America, which is a source of deep concern to me."

Asked whether he rated himself liberal or a conservative, Thomas replied:

"Does any one really know what a liberal is? Or a conservative? I don't."

He intimated he was opposed to a Government loan to Finland or any foreign country. He said he had no further comment on this now, but said there will be "quotations from me later on, you may be sure."

Thomas expressed no desire to serve on any specific committees.

He was appointed by Republican Gov. C. A. Bottolfsen to serve until the November election.

men and other persons having dinner together and talking politics. This dinner was no different from any of dozens of others which politically-minded persons frequently attend. 'Collusion' is a strange word to apply to an ordinary stag dinner.

"After an informal dinner the conversation turned to the Dies committee and its social significance. The psychological aspects of the work of the Dies committee were argued both pro and con. Among many other things, the possibility of a 'tie-up' between Dies and the Christian Front was discussed and the existence of the Mayne letters was also mentioned. But, certainly there was no agreement to use these letters, and the notion of a so-called 'plot' by these Congressmen or by Mr. Jackson at this dinner is not only silly—it is untrue."

Hook May Take Floor

There was expectation in some circles last night that Hook would take the floor today in connection with the charges, and that Dies, just back from his Texas home where he has been ill, would be present to hear him.

The House Rules Committee today will consider a resolution by Representative Hoffman (Republican), of Michigan, to expunge from the record the letters introduced by Hook. An offer by Hook to withdraw them was blocked when he refused to concede he was convinced they were spurious.

Disclosure that Mayne, who is said to have admitted writing the letters over Pelley's name, once was in the service of the Dies Committee while it was seeking Pelley, has added another angle to the picture.

Virginian Is Killed On Leesburg Pike

Archie Melvin, 29, of Leesburg, Va., was killed yesterday morning when the automobile he was operating collided with another on Leesburg pike near Tycon's Corner, Va. Fairfax County Sheriff Eppa Kirby said Melvin was in the wrong lane.

Mrs. Vance Neal, of Leesburg, who, with her husband, was a passenger in Melvin's automobile, was cut and bruised about the head and arms. Kirby said, the other automobile was operated by J. C. Bahlayer, of Deal, Md., and contained Mrs. Bahlayer and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Earl Everhart, of 2101 Connecticut avenue northwest, none of whom was injured.

6-Man Panel Ends In 3 Two-Way Debates Over Wagner Act

A six-man discussion of the Wagner Act and National Labor Relations Board last night broke into three near-simultaneous debates last night in a coast-to-coast broadcast of the American Forum of the Air.

While Senator Minton of Indiana, Democratic whip and labor board defender, and Representative Hoffman, Michigan Republican and a leading advocate of revision, shot broadsides at one another, C. I. O. Counsel Lee Pressman squared off orally with Representative Wood, Missouri A. F. L. chief, and Representative Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, vainly tried to get Charles aFhy, Labor Board counsel, to admit the board was "crusading."

The hour's free-for-all, which continued in the cloak-room after the broadcast, was staged in the Interior Department studio and broadcast via WOL. Theodore Granik, Washington attorney and founder of the program, was chairman.

Wood Denounces "Dictator" Steps

"The law is unfair and unjust," charged Representative Hoffman. "It must be amended to protect the employer as well as the employe."

"Opponents of the act are inspired by the fact that the law has worked," returned Senator Minton. "We should amend the act, yes—but only to relieve the board of the responsibility in settling bargaining unit disputes between the A. F. L. and C. I. O. unions."

"Let the workers choose their own bargaining units," insisted Representative Wood, after denouncing the board for "dictatorially" giving the C. I. O. complete jurisdiction over West Coast longshoremen, by fixing the entire Pacific Coast as a single bargaining unit.

"Employes did choose their own bargaining unit on the West Coast," retorted Pressman, and then scored the board for not following "its own rules" in other cases in which the A. F. L. unions won.

Charges Authority Exceeded

"The board has circumvented the intentions of Congress and overstepped its authority in allowing an association of employers to bargain as a single employer," insisted Representative Ramspeck, referring to the Pacific longshoremen.

"The board has such authority," answered Fahy, citing from the statutes. "Collective bargaining must tend toward larger units in the interests of industrial peace. I hope Congress will not bar the board from deciding what the bargaining unit shall be."

Minton defended the board's record.

Representative Ramspeck, a member of the House Labor Committee, pointed out that he had supported the Wagner Act, but that experience demonstrated it needed amending.

Fahy denied that House hearings had proved any such thing. He admitted that during the board's early days a part of the personnel was "overzealous." But, he concluded, on the whole the board has done a good job.

Fahy warned that proposals of Wood and Ramspeek to increase the board to five would not solve problems arising in administration of the act.

Miss Bankhead to Give $3,000 To Finns Tomorrow Night

Will Add $2,000 She Has Collected to Her Own Pay Check of $1,000; Mother Meets Train on Arrival for Role in 'Little Foxes'

Speaker William B. Bankhead's daughter Tallulah came to town yesterday with a fur coat and a touch of grippe to undertake a difficult role in "The Little Foxes," opening at the National Theater tonight.

Reiterating that she was "greatly concerned over the Finnish situation, she said she would give her basic salary check of $1,000 to the Washington unit of the Finnish Relief Fund at the conclusion of her performance Tuesday night.

She has collected $2,000 for the relief cause and will add this to her own contribution of $1,000 Tuesday night if it is agreeable with Finnish Relief Fund representatives here, she said.

Miss Bankhead was met at the Union Station, on her arrival at 4:20 p. m., by her mother. The Speaker, Mrs. Bankhead told her daughter, was slightly indisposed and unable to go to the station.

Lillian Hellman, vice president of the National League of Women Shoppers and author of "The Little Foxes," will be guest of honor at a tea to be given by Mrs. Gifford Pinchot at 5 p. m. tomorrow at her home, 1615 Rhode Island avenue northwest. The wife of the former Pennsylvania Governor is a local sponsor of the league. Invitations have been sent to more than 400 local members.

Miss Bankhead will be interviewed for 15 minutes on Station WOL today, beginning at 1:15 p. m.

Finns in Hock, War Necessary, Says Hathaway

Daily Worker Editor Gets Attention but Few Cheers From 600

The Soviet Union is going to war by "necessity" against "no independent, democratic Finland, but only a Finland in hock controlled by the bankers of the United States, England and Sweden," said Clarence Hathaway, editor of the Communist newspaper, Daily Worker, yesterday.

Speaking with intensity, perspiration rolling down his cheeks, under a sign reading "White labor as the bulwark of the Nation, democracy and peace," Hathaway received attention but few cheers from the audience of 600 at the National Press Building Auditorium.

"The manner in which the Finns are treating the Russians, according to the newspapers, is unsurpassed by anything in history," he declared. "We should start a movement to aid the Russians as a counter-move to Hoover's Finnish Relief Fund if these stories are true."

Expressing disbelief in accounts of Finnish victories, Hathaway quoted excerpts from Lenin's demands for revolutionary methods, then leaped to the conclusion that "events of the last few years show that the imperialistic nations desire to move against the Soviet."

Cause of the present inactivity in the European war is that Great Britain is trying to form a solid European and Asiatic "front" against Russia, Hathaway said.

He stated that the Finnish leader Mannerheim is not a Finn, but a Russian "aristocrat" brought to power by "German bayonets." "If it was good for Mannerheim to come to power with German bayonets, it won't be so bad for the Finnish workers to come to power with Russian bayonets," he declared.

Henry Winston, national Negro youth leader, condemned the conviction of Earl Browder, condemned the producers of "Gone With the Wind," condemned opponents of the anti-lynching bill, and condemned the "subterfuge, hypocricy and lies, leading "American youth to war" as the particular handiwork of the present administration.

He pleaded for closer understanding between the white and colored races.

Youth, Lost 28 Hours, Is Found Alive

WEBSTER JONES

Harvard Student's Legs Were Frozen in Blizzard on Peak

By the Associated Press

Crawford Notch, N. H., Feb. 4.—Wrapped in blankets and half-buried in snow, his face black from cold, Webster N. Jones, jr., 19, Harvard sophomore, was found alive today after being lost 28 hours in below-zero temperature on blizzard-swept Mount Washington.

Although the 6-foot Pittsburgher told his rescuers he "didn't feel too bad," searchers said his legs apparently were frozen from the knees down. Hope of finding the boy alive had been abandoned.

Carried 5 miles down the Crawford Trail by rude stretcher and toboggan, Jones was placed in a Civilian Conservation Corps ambulance on the valley floor and taken to Littleton Hospital.

He was greeted joyously there by his father, Dr. W. N. Jones, director of the College of Engineering at the Carnegie Institute of Technology.

Dr. Jones flew to Boston early today and transferred to a plane bound for Montpelier, Vt., aboard which he met Gov. Aiken, of Vermont, who drove the father from the Vermont capital to Littleton.

Young Jones became separated from his skiing companion, Karl J. Sax, 20, of Boston, a Harvard senior, on Saturday morning, when a heavy blizzard forced them to abandon their trek to the summit of Mount Washington.

Sax, who may lose several fingers from frost bite, stumbled into a State highway camp yesterday, telling of his companion's plight. hour wind and 18-below zero

Forced to abandon the search yesterday because of a 90-mile-an-temperature, snowshoe-equipped White Mountain rangers, highway patrolmen and Deer River CCC boys marched on the mountain by three routes before dawn today. They had little expectation of finding the youth alive.

At 11:30 a. m. Patrolman Armand Rousseau and Warner Marshall discovered ski trails which led them to Jones' half-covered form only a few feet off the Crawford Trail.

Retail Sales Up 7½% as All Lines Gain

$37,950,000,000 Total Still Below '37 Peak; Auto Lag Blamed

Retail sales in 1939 amounted to $37,950,000,000, an increase of $2,500,000, or 7 per cent, over 1938, the Commerce Department estimated yesterday.

The 1939 figure was about $2,000,000,000 under the 1937 recovery peak. Half of this difference was attributed by the department to lower prices and half to smaller sales in the automotive field.

Secretary Hopkins, in announcing the estimates, said the upswing was shared by all major business groups. Automobile sales increased 28 per cent over 1938. Mail order houses showed the greatest gain in general merchandise sales, 12 per cent.

Variety store sales climbed 5.5 per cent to $905,000,000, passing the previous high marks of 1937 and 1929.

Food sales were up 2 per cent to $9,095,000,000 and gasoline station sales gained 1 per cent to $2,428,000,000. Beer and liquor sales of $418,000,000 were recorded, an increase of 6 per cent, whil eating and drinking places indicated sales of $2,770,000,000, a gain of 3.5 per cent.

Other indicated gains: Furniture and household appliance stores, 12.5 per cent; lumber, building and hardware stores, 10 per cent; jewelry stores, 10 per cent; department, dry goods and general merchandise stores, 6.5 per cent; apparel stores, 5.5 per cent.

Exports of farm equipment declined 9 per cent in 1939 to $68,506,716 despite a sharp increase in December.

Slattery was appointed by Gov. Henry Horner to succeed the late J. Hamilton Lewis. If he runs again, it will be for the remainder of Lewis' term, which expires in 1943.

Webster a Friend of Groundhog

It was Daniel Webster, who pleaded for Union, one and inseparable, now and forever, and also for the life of a groundhog.

Embarrassed researchers, among them experts in the Library of Congress and Central Public Library, lately couldn't run down the anecdote of a famous American who became the advocate of the groundhog—when the question was put on groundhog day by a Post reporter (who also didn't know). Now they can be assured it was Webster.

In response to the news story carried by The Post February 3, Eunice M. Parker, 2113 Third street northeast, wrote that the incident occurred during a long, cold winter in New Hampshire. Some predatory animal had chewed the bark off the Webster trees, and eaten the Webster corn.

"Mr. Webster was a circuit judge . . . and had two sons, Ezekiel and Daniel. They caught a woodchuck. The father, being a practical man, told the boys to choose sides to decide the animal's fate—Ezekiel as the complainant; Daniel, the defender."

Ezekiel berated the hog, telling how the farmer's grain, labored over, had been spoiled by the intruder. He told of the financial loss. Daniel countered that the groundhog had to live on roots and was driven to its theft by the long cold winter, the deep snow.

"Judge Webster looked at his sons with tears in his eyes, saying: 'Zeke, Zeke, we'll let that woodchuck go.'" Miss Parker related.

Another correspondent, C. Vernon Eddy, librarian, Handley Library, Winchester, Va., referred Washington researchers to "Animals of American History," by Paul Bransom and Helen Fish, Stokes, 1939.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Carlos Chavez conducts the National Symphony Orchestra Sunday afternoon in Constitution Hall. Program: Overture to "Coriolanus" (Beethoven), Symphony No. 82 in C major (Haydn), Chacona in E minor (Buxtehud-Chavez), "La Mer" (Debussy), Three Dances from "El Sombrero de Tres Picos" (Falla).

A good neighbor from Mexico, Carlos Chavez, was given a rousing welcome in Constitution Hall yesterday afternoon when he appeared as guest conductor of the National Symphony Orchestra. It was a reception which grew from a cordial greeting when he stepped on the podium to a prolonged ovation at the close of the concert, with each step marked by a mounting enthusiasm. He was recalled three times at the intermission period, and five times after he had finished the program, the final salvos of applause being mingled with cries of approbation. In all these demonstrations the orchestra members joined, and nearly as many of the visitor's acknowledging bows were directed at the players as at the audience.

The congratulatory outbursts were fully deserved by Senor Chavez who disclosed admirable qualities as a conductor. His style is authoritative and forceful, running the gamut of emotion from calm control to fiery vehemence, and his projection of music is intensely vitalized. Using neither score nor baton, he directs with a minimum of time-beating, his commanding hands summoning the instrumental entrances and outlining the rhythmic contours. His indications of tempo are not metronomic, but plastic, and his acute sense of rhythm is evident in the subtle variations of pace that keep the music moving with a seeming life of its own.

Leader Appreciative

It was fortunate both for Senor Chavez and the auditors that Dr. Hans Kindler's training had brought into readiness an orchestra so responsive and so willing to cooperate with a transient leader. The musicians gave their best, and that best was very good indeed. Their playing was continually warm and animated, and they were ever on the alert to meet the requests for tone-color and dynamic gradations. Senor Chavez let the auditors know that he recognized and appreciated this consentient spirit, for he thanked the players repeatedly, shook concertmaster Millard Taylor's hand more than once, and asked the orchestra to stand with him in receiving plaudits.

He began the concert with a reading of Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture remarkable for the dramatic effects produced by economical means. The dynamic level was kept low and intense, and the climaxes were powerfully built on that scale, the cumulative force reaching a peak without excessive volume of sound. It was a notable proof of the fact that an overwhelming emotional stress is not so much a matter of mere noise as of the degrees by which the stress is attained.

If the performance of Haydn's "Bear" symphony was not a local premiere, the work has certainly not been heard here for many a season. The first of the so-called "Paris symphonies," it represents the composer's happiest moods; there is not a slow movement among the four, and the music is unfalteringly lively, and gay. To the modern ear there is nothing to suggest a bear in the humorous finale, but it is probable that Haydn's contemporaries recognized in the imitation of a droning musette the kind of dance in which bears were trained to lumber.

An American Dance

The first part of the program ended with the conductor's excellent transcription of Dietrich Buxtehude's chacona in E minor, an organ work which Bach might have heard on the famous occasion when he walked 200 miles to sit at the feet of the composer. Here again the restraint of Senor Chavez was in evidence, for in the instrumentation he kept the volumes in proportion to the organ resources of Buxtehude's time, and noble beauty of the music was presented without any distortion.

Works of reference still tell us that the chacona was a dance probably brought to Spain by the Moors. But recently, Dr. Curt Sachs, author of "A World History of the Dance," made a surprising discovery. He found that in 1599 a poem written for the wedding of Philip III contained an invitation "to go to Tampico in Mexico and dance the chacona." Looking further, he confirmed the American origin of the dance on the authority of Quevedo, who called in the "Chacona Mulata," and of Cervantes, who spoke of it as the "Indians Amulatada." Thus it would seem that Senor Chavez followed an instinct of nationalism when he chose the Buxtehude work for arrangement.

The performance of Debussy's "La Mer," which followed the intermission, was the most beautiful and subtle evocation of that masterpiece that I have ever heard. The poesy of the music was brought out with delicacies of phrase and undulancies of movement that delighted the ear. In color and in descriptive sound, nothing was overlooked, whether it was the glaucous light of a breaking wave or the susurrus of foam upon the strand.

For his concluding number Senor Chavez selected Spanish music patently sympathetic to his temperament: Three dances from Manuel de Falla's ballet, "El Sombrero de Tres Picos." His direction of these spirited pieces was a revelation of their rhythmic fluidity and their inherent racial singularities.

Fur Baron Falls 10 Floors Into Awning; Walks

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—Richard Jaeckel, 55, socially prominent head of a wealthy fur family, fell out of his brother's tenth-floor apartment today and landed on a canvas canopy just above the sidewalk.

Doctors said two hours later he was "perfectly okay and able to walk around."

He had not even suffered a broken bone, although the canopy's 1½-inch galvanized iron piping was badly bent.

Adventists Form Medical Corps

The enrollees range from 17 to 60 years.

The first training class for the unit will be held tonight at 7:30 o'clock at the Takoma Park Church School on Elm avenue Takoma Park.

The Takoma Park unit is the first to be formed in the United States. The plan is in accord with the action of the General Conference in Lincoln last October. A medical corps committee was formed then to establish the corps in harmony with authorities.

Members of the corps will wear forest green uniforms, with black shoes and neckties. All members are expected to be outfitted with uniforms before February 19. Training classes will be held weekly with graduation in the fall, when a new unit will be formed.

Where medical corps training is not available, members will be given instruction in standard and advanced Red Cross training. Local units will have the advantage of the teaching by medical authorities who are serving at the Washington Sanitarium and other Adventist institutions.

Headquarters personnel for the Medical Cadet Corps of the Columbia Union Conference includes: Dr. W. P. McNeill, commandant and medical advisor; Dr. Read N. Calvert, surgeon; Sergt. John N. Kailor, drill instructor; D. M. Brown, commander; T. C. Metcalf, executive officer; Julius C. Peter, jr., finance and supply officer; W. B. Mohr, adjutant and personnel officer; D. W. Hunter, chaplain; F. E. Marsh, coordinator of Red Cross first aid instruction; H. M. Baldwin, assistant adjutant and personnel officer; Robert Riecks, assistant supply and finance officer; J. G. Hann, assistant chaplain; Kemp Moore, master sergeant in adjutant's office.

Members of the council formed to direct the local cadet corps include: The Rev. C. P. Sorenson, secretary of Missionary Volunteer Department, Columbia Conference; Prof. J. P. Neff, superintendent of education; Dr. Robert A. Hare, medical director, Washington Sanitarium.

Dominions Held Key to British Victory

Canada's Part Stressed In Foreign Policy Association Report

By International News Service

Britain's dominions hold the key to Allied hopes for victory in the European war, the Foreign Policy Association declared yesterday.

A report by James Frederick Green of the association's research staff said Allied success turns on Britain's "ability to utilize the vast economic resources of both the empire and neutral countries, as well as its own industrial capacity, financial strength and maritime supremacy."

In terms of manpower and economic capacity, the dominions today stand "far better prepared than in 1914 to defend their own territories and assist the United Kingdom," Green said. In the World War, he added, they provided impressive quantities of foodstuffs and raw materials, though the United States "proved the most valuable arsenal for Great Britain."

Pointing out that Canada already has dispatched an expeditionary force of 20,000 men and that the dominions in the last war mobilized more than 1,400,000 troops, the analysis continued:

"It can hardly be doubted that all four dominions will not only continue economic support, but contribute man power if necessary. Even South Africa would probably expand its military aid if a defeat of Britain seemed imminent."

Without minimizing the economic storehouses of South Africa, New Zealand and Australia, the report emphasized the probable part of Canada in the war, stating:

"Canada's economic war potential has increased enormously since 1914. Canada may be expected to contribute heavily to Britain's wartime supplies, in zinc, lead, copper, foodstuffs, nickel, platinum, asbestos, wheat and bacon."

Hamilton Flouts Youth Congress

what I would not."

He cited the Dies Committee report classifying seven organizations which participated in the Youth Congress last July as "'front organizations' of the Communist Party." He said he was unable to "understand how the professed objectives of the American Youth Congress can be promoted by including within its ranks groups enamoured of an immoral, imperialistic and autocratic regime in Russia."

Using no names, he continued:

"It is indeed unfortunate that well meaning persons of high standing and in places of responsible leadership have permitted themselves to be made 'fronts' to give respectability to the activities of such groups and thus to mislead and confuse persons about whose Americanism there can be no question."

Sending of the letter recalled that that when the A. Y. C. was under fire before the Dies Committee, Mrs. Roosevelt attended some of the sessions and took the A. Y. C. witnesses to lunch at the White House.

Among those to attend the White House meeting tonight, the A. Y. C. statement said, are Senators Wagner of New York, Guffey of Pennsylvania, Minton of Indiana, Wheeler of Montana, Hill of Alabama, Lee of Oklahoma, Thomas of Utah, Lundeen of Minnesota, Mead of New York, Green of Rhode Island, Schwellenbach of Washington and Pepper of Florida.

Representatives to attend are Rayburn of Texas, Sabath and Keller of Illinois, McGranery, Sacks and Dunn of Pennsylvania, Geyer, Havvener, Voorhis and Izac of California, Houston of Kansas, Rogers of Oklahoma, McKeough and Fries of Illinois, Schulte of Indiana, Pierce of Oregon, Hook and Tenerowicz of Michigan, Casey of Massachusetts, Norton of New Jersey, Eberharter of Pennsylvania, Patrick of Alabama and O'Day and Marcantonio of New York.

Geyer and Marcantonio, it was said, will introduce today a bill to appropriate $500,000,000 to provide vocational training and job and educational opportunities for young people.

The Washington Youth Council announced last night that a portion of the parade which will feature the National Youth Citizenship Institute here this week will be devoted to appeals for District suffrage.

Delegates to the institute will march at 11 a. m. Saturday from the Capitol to the White House where President Roosevelt will address them.

Other parade sections will be on jobs, peace and civil liberties.

Justice Hugo Black Is in Hospital With 'Mild' Case of Flu

Associate Justice Hugo Black, of the United States Supreme Court, was confined last night to George Washington University Hospital with what his physician, Dr. Paul Dickens, described as a "mild attack of influenza." Dr. Dickens said Black would be unable to attend sessions of the court today. He lives in Alexandria.

Result Is Termed Happy

The results of the gathering are unexpectedly happy since the unfortunate world situation and the pressure exerted by the rival belligerents did not present the most favorable omens for its convocation.

It would seem that Italy's policy of remaining unentangled in the sphere of warfare and keeping both actual boundaries and territorial claims in status quo is dominant in this sector.

It appears that while no specific attempts to create a concrete southeastern European bloc which would act as a unit, are yet under way, everything is being done to remove causes of friction in the area, and maintain a tolerant attitude.

The Bulgarian reaction is said to be initially favorable, but Hungary's views on the conference are not clear.

It is believed by many diplomats that Budapest is somewhat disappointed and feels isolated since its revisionist aspirations are pretty well blocked, if the present mood of unity and Italian cooperation prevail.

Hungarian Cooperation Possible

However, there are many who foresee Hungarian cooperation if Bulgaria signifies a similar frame of mind.

As for the great powers who are at war: Since Germany needs quiet in the southeast to insure communications and supplies, she cannot be irritated by developments so far, although she is opposed to the idea of a crystalized neutral bloc.

Allied sentiments are not unfavorable, but Russia is piqued.

A group of experts will study the possibility of creating joint marketing boards for the Entente states. Attempts will be made to work out methods of distributing among the Balkan countries some of the essential raw material they own.

Rumania on Oil

It is understood Gafencu stated Rumania did not intend to increase her oil sales to Germany beyond what is foreseen under the existing agreement.

Cooperation of the four ministers has been evident throughout the talks. The regional idea was developed by Gafencu, who has been in close touch with Rome. Before the Rumanian minister made his speech last night he showed it to Saracoglu.

Separate Pacts Foreseen

Belgrade, Feb. 4 (AP).—A series of negotiations by which Balkan Entente nations will seek to align themselves individually with a larger power in search of guarantees was looked for by some observers in the wake of the conference just concluded here.

Italy to Be Intermediary

Yugoslav Foreign Minister Cincar-Markovic was expected to visit Rome shortly with Italy acting as an intermediary between Hungary and Yugoslavia.

Turkish Foreign Minister Saracoglu announced he will visit the Bulgarian capital on his way home and is expected to lay the groundwork for close relations between the two countries.

Rumania, observers said, probably will continue trade negotiations with Germany, which was understood in some quarters to have offered to furnish territorial guarantees in return for increased exports, particularly oil.

Greece, already allied with Turkey and close to Britain, was expected to move closer—at least economically—to Britain and France.

Roosevelt Talks Politics and Trees With Local Allies

Hyde Park, N. Y., Feb. 4 (AP).—President Roosevelt had a leisurely chat today with John E. Mack, a political ally of long standing, and James Townsend, Dutchess County Democratic chairman.

Townsend said the discussion was confined to politics in Dutchess County, and trees.

Mack, an attorney at Poughkeepsie, twice placed the Chief Executive's name in nomination for the Presidency at Democratic national conventions.

Spending the Sabbath quietly with members of his family, Mr. Roosevelt chose to ignore, so far as any public reaction was concerned, the filing in Illinois of petitions to put his name on the State Democratic Advisory Primary Ballot in April, the indorsement of a third-term by the Pennsylvania Democratic State Committee, and reports of activities on behalf of Vice President Garner in Georgia and New York.

The President will be back in the Capital Tuesday morning, and receive the Democratic National Committee at the White House.

'It's Terrible;' Stamp Release Dates Broken

Philatelists in Arms Over 'Unethical' Collecting Practice

By Scott Hart

Regreting "that there are some unethical stamp collectors," Washington philatelists yesterday took public notice of goings on that Col. Charles S. Hamilton, president of Collectors Club No. 5, Society of Philatelic Americans, and member of the Board of Governors, Washington Philatelic Society, described as "a terrible thing."

One word stronger, to "skulduggery," went another prominent collector who asked anonymity.

It had come to light that some collectors, through devices unknown as yet, have been obtaining new stamp issues and getting cancellations on them before the first day sale—a form of preview that can be gainful.

The collectors' spleen is not toward the postmasters. They think the unethical collectors have bamboozled the postmasters.

Robert E. Fellers, superintendent, division of stamps, Postoffice Department, explained that to ethical and expert philatelists these stamps obtained ahead of time have no increased value. But the unethical collectors, he said, frequently are successful in selling them to inexpert collectors at big prices.

There have been reports from six or eight cities about this, among them Rockville, Md., Fellers said. The 3-cent purple Ralph Waldo Emerson, that goes on sale today at Boston, and the 5-cent blue Louisa May Alcott, scheduled for sale today at Concord, Mass., already have gone through canceling machines.

Polish Sights Depress Nazis

For every German soldier murdered a score of Poles are shot against a wall.

How many Poles have been shot may never be known. A military judge told me:

"As an execution place in Bromberg the main market was chosen, and corpses in heaps were allowed to lie all day as a warning. Much rabble was dragged out and placed against a wall. It was pitiful to watch, but we also found Poles dying as heroes."

Children Play Execution

This judge especially remembered a young man standing up, his proud eyes looking straight into the gun barrels. Just before the volley was fired the youth stretched both his arms to the sky and shouted the solemn opening phrase of Poland's national anthem, "Poland is not yet lost."

For weeks afterward, this judge said, as he walked around Bromberg he saw on street corners and in yards a new game among small Polish children. They played "execution." The play hero everywhere was a boy thrusting his arms toward the sky and shouting the same sentence.

The fight against the Poles is still going on, and this fight is directed primarily at intelligent Poles who have organized passive resistance, sabotage, etc., and inside whom the last fighting spirit still burns with inextinguishable hatred for the invading enemies.

It is going to be a grand-scale extirpation war—at least against Poles organizing resistance. Generally there is no resistance on the part of the poor.

200 Police Quell Mutiny On Greek Ship in N. Y. Harbor

By International News Service

New York, Feb. 4.—More than 200 policemen were called into action late today to quell a mutiny of 29 sailors aboard the Panama-registered Greek freighter, Halcyon, anchored since Thursday in the narrows of New York Bay one-half mile off Sixty-ninth street and Shore road, Brooklyn.

The mutiny was inspired by the irresistible thirst of the crew for "a glass of beer," according to the version of the mutineers, while the ship's first officer, Paul Olandis, declared they insisted on shore leave so they could desert the ship.

Unaware of what was actually happening aboard, 24 members of the police harbor patrol—first on the scene and all armed with riot guns and service revolvers—scaled a "jacob's ladder" to the ship's deck and after an hour bedlam lined the mutineers up as hundreds of Sunday sightseers lined the shore.

Reinforcements from two other police boats, eight radio squad cars bearing 16 officers, a police emergency squad, scores of especially assigned patrolmen and detectives, and an ambulance arrived within a few minutes after the first alarm of trouble aboard.

Efforts of the boarding officers to quell the disturbance were hampered by the fact that only one member of the crew could speak English.

A request for shore leave Friday was refused because of orders of the U. S. Immigration Service.

Capt. Coudfoudakis was ashore visiting friends when the mutiny broke out shortly after 3 p. m. Until a late hour police were searching for him without success.

Olandis suffered painful, but not serious, cuts and bruises from being tossed about above decks. He said that at one time in the fracas the crew had threatened to throw him overboard.

The crew, through its lone interpreter, explained that it had no intention of deserting but a heavy police guard was placed awaiting replacement by private detectives hired by the ship's owners.

Dr. Fendrich Praises Greeks At Services

Presbyterian Pastor Is Guest Speaker at St. Sophia's Church

Standing near the altar of a Greek Orthodox church, Dr. J. Lowrey Fendrich, Presbyterian clergyman, yesterday extolled Greece's contributon to Christianity and civilization.

He is pastor of Metropolitan Presbyterian Church and was the speaker at the local celebration of "Greek Letters and Culture Sunday" at St. Sophia's Greek Orthodox Church, Eighth and L streets northwest.

Commemorating the canonization of Greek patron saints of education, St. Chrystostom, Basil the Great and St. Gregory, the ceremony opened with a procession of children from St. Sophia's School, marching behind Greek and American flags.

Choir Chants in Program

Taking places before the sanctuary, the youngsters looked on as the Rev. Aemilianos Laloussis, pastor, conducted the ritual of his faith. The choir chanted Byzantine music. The choir leader, John Chrystostom, also heads the church's school, which held an individual celebration last night.

Father Laloussis, who is being considered as one of the bishops of the Greek Orthodox Church, emphasized the significance of the "day," welcomed the guests and introduced Charles Demas, of the church's board of trustees. Demas presented Dr. Fendrich.

Fendriches Meet Officials

Following the service Dr. and Mrs. Fendrich met the officials of St. Sophia's Church, and then joined them in dinner.

Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, arrived as services were "breaking up." He went to the wrong church, he explained.

Several children of S. S. Constantine and Helen Church had a narrow escape from injury during the after-church hour yesterday. The congregation-owned bus was in an accident.

200 Hospital Beds Rushed to Finns By British Planes

London, Feb. 4.—Two hundred hospital camp beds have been flown to Finland by British planes in answer to an urgent appeal from Helsinki.

They are part of a consignment of 1,000 such beds which the British Red Cross Society has bought on behalf of the Finnish Medical Board.

Other supplies which have been rushed to Finland by plane include ascorbic acid (a preparation of vitamin C to replace shortage of fruit and vegetables) and hospital equipment ranging from surgical instruments to bed socks.

Japan Bombs French-Owned Railway Again

Traffic Is Cut; Receipt of Protest From U. S. Admitted

By the United Press

Shanghai (Monday), Feb. 5.—Japanese planes bombed the French-owned Yunnan Railway again Saturday and stopped communications on additional sections of the railway, according to dispatches from Kunming, the Yunnan capital, last night.

Twenty-seven planes participated in the raid dropping most of their bombs on the railway line and yards at Kaiyuan, about 100 miles from the border of French Indo-China.

Chinese pursuit planes engaged the bombers and it was believed that some of them were "damaged."

Earlier raids on the line, in which a number of persons were killed and others wounded, brought informal protests from the United States on the ground that continued operation of the railway is essential to Chinese-American commerce.

Japanese said the line would be bombed continuously so long as the French authorities permit military supplies for the Chinese to pass over it.

Note's Receipt Admitted

Tokyo (Monday), Feb. 5 (U.P.).—Foreign Office Spokesman Suma, after announcing yesterday that he was unaware of any American protest against action of the Japanese air force in bombing the French-owned Yunnan Railway in South China, said today that Eugene H. Dooman, counselor of the U. S. Embassy, handed an aide memoire on the subject to the foreign office Thursday.

The aide memoire called attention of the Japanese to the fact that the bombings, aimed at cutting off foreign supplies for China's nationalist armies, were damaging American goods and cutting off Americans in Chungking, the provisional Chinese capital, from the outside world.

Suma said the note was immediately sent to the war office. The foreign office is studying it and may answer, Suma added.

55 Killed in Attack

leaving large numbers of dead and wounded.

This procedure continues almost incessantly at intervals of a few hours. While hundreds of Russians are being driven to death, the Finns are undergoing their own ordeal in their trenches, with shells exploding around them and planes hunting them out to spray them with bullets and drop hundreds of small bombs. The shell-damaged trenches must be constantly repaired.

Thousands of Russian bodies now lie in front of the Mannerheim Line, which is a belt of comparatively strong fortifications many miles deep. According to Finnish reports, no part of this line has yet been penetrated.

Ghost of Gen. Ma Haunts Japanese, Eludes 2 Armies

By the Associated Press

Shanghai (Monday), Feb. 5.—Japan's northern army, pressing deep into Suiyuan Province in Inner Mongolia, is engaged in one of the greatest "ghost" hunts in history.

In sub-zero weather, the Japanese were reported pursuing across the desolate snow-covered Ordos Plains a Chinese warrior they officially announced they had killed eight years ago.

He is Gen. Ma Chan-Shan, hero of the Nonni River battle during the Japanese invasion of Manchuria in 1932.

A thorn in the side of the invaders for more than a year, Ma officially was reported by the Japanese to have been killed in action in northern Manchuria. So sure were the Japanese of his death that they sent to Emperor Hirohito what they believed to be his medals and uniforms.

An Annoying Ghost

Japanese believe anything reported to the emperor becomes "irrevocable." Hence the Japanese army leaders were unable to admit Gen. Ma was alive. Recently he has become a very annoying "corpse," Chinese say.

Ma's "dare-to-die corps" attempted late in December to recapture Paotouchen, Suiyuan Province capital. Chinese soldiers entered the city before the Japanese drove them back.

The Japanese last week organized a punitive expedition, dispatching one column westward from Paotouchen and sending the other across the Yellow River from northwestern Shansi Province.

General Ma's troops are reported to include two cavalry detachments commanded by 21-year-old Mongol princesses.

Yangkiatien Taken

Today the Japanese pursuers reported capture of Yangkiatien, 220 miles west of Paotouchen, after destroying Chinese bases at Wuyuan and elsewhere on the Ordos Plain.

Fifty thousand Chinese troops under Ma and Gen. Fu-Tso-Yi, Suiyuan Province military commander, were said to be in flight across the plain as Japanese reached the war's deepest point of penetration into the continent.

In Kwangsi Province the Japanese said they had surrounded 50,000 Chinese troops attempting to recapture Nanning and inflicted 20,000 casualties. Chinese said the invaders' gains had been made at the expense of huge losses.

The Chinese claimed to have razed Japanese barracks and a supply depot and to have blown up three railway bridges in Honan Province.

Balkans Ease Interned Poles' Way to Legion in France

By the Associated Press

Zagreb, Yugoslavia, Feb. 4.—Almost under the noses of German agents, remnants of Poland's shattered army are finding ways of returning to the war against Germany.

German consular representatives have protested that 500 Poles a day are leaving internment camps in Hungary and Rumania and are setting out either for the growing Polish Legion in France or the Allied forces in Syria.

"The number is between 50 and 100 daily," a Polish spokesman said, however. "All go as civilians but they naturally are anxious to serve their country again."

Polish legations in Budapest and Bucharest, operating without interruption since the war began, supply papers to get their citizens across international boundaries. Money for civilian clothes to replace old uniforms and for train fare comes from less official sources.

Last October relief agencies estimated 60,000 Polish soldiers along with 20,000 civilians had taken refuge in Hungary and Rumania. After several thousand officers and men had slipped away into France, German pressure drastically curtailed this traffic.

Some sources here now say Hungary and Rumania are only too glad to let the refugee problem solve itself by departure of the Poles despite German displeasure. In January whole companies of Poles succeeded in getting permission to travel abroad.

Air Raids on Shipping Seen As Nazi Answer to Churchill

By Raymond Daniell.

Copyright by New York Times

London, Feb. 4.—Winston Churchill's repeated invitations to neutral ships to join British convoys and enjoy the safety of the mine-strewn and submarine-infested waters of the North Sea appear to have drawn an answer from Germany.

Therein apparently lies the explanation of the air raids of last week in which craft had their decks raked by machine-gun fire and crews were forced to abandon ship while bombs were rained upon them.

Whether any convoys were actually attacked, the admiralty will not say. Careful checking today failed to disclose any evidence to support the official German claims that 14 ships were destroyed yesterday in raids which cost the Nazis three bombers out of a dozen.

It appeared that only one ship, the 629-ton Norwegian, Tempo, was actually sunk by German bombs, although at least 20 seamen were killed aboard a dozen or more British and neutral ships which were damaged, abandoned or beached under attack.

It is German strategy to discourage the ships of neutral nations from calling at British ports. This would materially curtail the imports and exports of England whose own tonnage is inadequate for its needs under the convoy system.

While officials ridiculed German claims of the amount of damage, there was evidence that the reign of terror over the narrow waters was sufficient to provide a springboard for the German broadcasters to tell a story which will take some answering from Churchill the next time he takes to the radio.

Refusing to disclose specific information about what really happened at sea yesterday, British naval officials asserted the German claims were merely a "come-on" to see what information they could elicit in the form of denials.

The Tempo was sunk by a German plane, which dropped three bombs after driving the crew overside with machine-gun fire. Nine members of the crew reached the coast, but six were drowned when a boat capsized.

Saturday night an SOS from the Whitby steamer Kildale, 3,877 tons, was received by a lifeboat station and two boats set out. While searching the seas for the crew of the Kildale, which the radio message said had been abandoned by its crew, the rescuers came upon the 400-ton Harley drifting as a derelict without a crew. Eight of the Harley's crew, one injured, were rescued by a fishing boat.

Meanwhile 15 survivors from the Kildale, which was abandoned after bombs set her aflame, were landed at an east coast port. Six of their shipmates were killed by bombs and machinegun bullets.

Two lifeboat men going to rescue the Belgian steamer Charles, 563 tons, which was attacked by German bombers, were drowned when they were washed overboard. Six of the Belgian crew of 10, who tried to get to shore on a raft were given up as lost.

Machinegun fire smashed the windows of the wheelhouse and killed the captain of the 823-ton collier Yewdale and injured three others, one seriously.

In the same area the trawler Rose of England, 223 tons, was attacked by two bombers, one using machine-guns to sweep the decks, while the other dropped bombs from a high altitude. The trawler made port undamaged and without casualties.

Another ship which reported an attack by a German plane off the east coast was the 3,431-ton Corland, now safely in port.

Off the east coast of Scotland a lifeboat was launched in answer to distress signals from an unidentified tanker which was attacked 11 miles off the coast of Angus. After a 3½-hour search, the rescuers returned to shore without having found survivors or wreckage.

Two other neutral ships reported under attack were the Swedish Mertainen, 4,531 tons, and the Greek Nicolaou Zografia, 7,050 tons. Both reached port safely.

A Reasonable Request

Representative Hook has demanded a grand jury investigation of charges that the letters which he placed in the Congressional Record concerning Representative Dies were forged.

Mr. Hook is naturally anxious to have the facts about these incriminating documents cleared up. He cannot hope to escape censure for his precipitancy in trying to blacken the reputation of a colleague without first making sure that the evidence was unimpeachable. But he can at least make some amends by urging a searching investigation to determine whether there are grounds for criminal action against any of the individuals who tried to link Mr. Dies with the Fascist leader of the Silver Shirts.

It is an old device of lobbyists to try to discredit a cause or a movement by striking at its protagonists. It is a cheap, unworthy method of attack, even when the victims are vulnerable. When they are "framed" by plotters willing to manufacture evidence, punishment should be swift and severe. That is why prompt steps should be taken in the present case to find out how much truth lies behind the charges brought against Mr. Dies' defamers.

No sympathy need be wasted on professional lobbyists who may have been so credulous or so careless as to encourage dishonest plotters by paying for their services. They deserve to have the searchlight of a grand jury investigation turned upon their activities. In the present instance such an investigation would serve the double purpose of clearing up obscurities and deterring lobbyists from engaging in the kind of activities that offend one's sense of decency, even if they fall short of law-breaking.

Tragic Illusions

It would be instructive to learn how and where the rumor originated that somebody in Germany had just discovered a cure for lymphatic lukemia. Unfortunately, there never was the slightest foundation for this report. In the meantime, however, the unhappy parents of a Washington child who is suffering from the dread disease saw their hopes rise only to be shattered.

Theirs was a cruel experience which, alas, has too often been repeated in the history of the human race. The improvement in means of communication effected by science has resulted not only in a greater diffusion of knowledge but also in the more rapid spread of unsubstantiated rumors. Some of these do no harm. Others do a great deal of harm. And among the latter are undoubtedly the false reports of cures for diseases.

Sometimes these reports are circulated by quacks who prey on the hopes of men and women. Once in a while they appear to be generated by something akin to spontaneous combustion—the wishful thinking of human beings. Not infrequently newspapers unwittingly disseminate reports that later prove to be untrue, although during recent years they have improved enormously in this particular. Whoever is responsible for such unsubstantiated claims or rumors renders an obvious disservice to the victims of misfortune.

On Taking A Seat

Movie stars, here for the President's birthday balls, may have left behind them a string of memories, broken hearts and autographs, but one at least created a serious controversy and left this paper holding the bag, or, the nag. It all started when Mr. Gene Autry was photographed mounting a horse at Fort Myer in the way he considered proper for a true cowboy to mount.

Letters to The Post criticizing Mr. Autry's technique not only differed with the movie hero's method of mounting but also with each other. Altogether our readers have been instructed in several ways. They may prepare to mount by facing the horse's head or his rear. With their left hand they may take only the reins, or the reins and a touch of mane, to make sure Rosinante doesn't walk out on them. With their right hand they may grasp the pommel, or, if they already have the mane in their left hand, they may let the other swing free. And so on.

Nobody up to this writing has suggested starting with the right boot in the stirrup and swinging the left over the horse's head. This method may have been omitted because it would presumably leave the rider mounted with his back to the nag's head.

Now this department has never made a specialty of bronco busting. Although it has been accused, upon occasion, of straddling issues, it neither straddles nor saddles equine problems. But taking a firm stand on the ground we would suggest resolving the whole controversy on the principle of Autry temps, Autry moeurs.

Third-Term Pressure

Every new development in the sphere of Democratic Presidential politics seems to lead to further confusion. The third-term question mark casts a shadow over every aspirant for the Democratic nomination and leaves party chieftains in the position of not knowing which way to turn.

This uncertainty in which the President takes such delight has set a number of Democratic leaders on edge. John L. Lewis has turned his back upon the third-term movement. Senator George has accused the President of jeopardizing the interests of his party by keeping it in a state of confusion. Vice President Garner is extending his own campaign in cool disregard of the President's wishes or intentions. The number of Democratic leaders who are restive but manage to hold their tongues must be legion.

On the other hand, supporters of Mr. Roosevelt for a third term have launched campaigns in his behalf in several States. The Democratic State committee of Pennsylvania has pledged its support to the President. Third-term sponsors in Illinois are attempting to place his name on the primary ballot. Party leaders in Ohio report that the delegation of that State will be for Mr. Roosevelt if he decides to run.

Today the Democratic National Committee will assemble in Washington to select a place and perhaps a date for that party's national convention. With these preliminaries attended to, the pressure upon the President to make his intentions known will inevitably increase. Party leaders will be loath to return home without any indication as to whether Mr. Roosevelt intends to call upon them for support in a third-term movement.

All of these developments suggest that the time during which the President may gracefully eliminate himself from the race is drawing nearer to an end. That large element within the Democratic Party which is opposed to any assault upon the two-term tradition will doubtless become more determined and outspoken in its opposition so long as the President remains silent. The groups which are coming out in favor of a third term will have ample cause for annoyance if the President permits them to go forward with their campaigns for any length of time and then lets them down.

It is possible, of course, that the President may maintain his noncommittal attitude until the eve of the national convention. But that course might leave his loyal followers with a severe case of nerves and give a decided advantage to candidates who are not sufficiently sympathetic with the New Deal to respect the President's wishes.

An increasing number of observers believe that President Rosevelt does not intend to make a third race for the Presidency. If he wishes to withdraw gracefully and to exert his great influence in behalf of party harmony in the 1940 race, it is difficult to believe that an announcement of his intentions will be long delayed.

Tuberculosis Funds

The sharp cut in District Tuberculosis Association funds to be placed at the disposal of the local Health Department is unfortunate chiefly because it comes at a time when the latter agency is under attack. It will be difficult for the public to dissociate this action from the recent unwarranted attempt to oust Health Officer Ruhland through a joker in the District reorganization bill.

Of course, the association is not under obligation to support health activities initiated by the District government. If, as the association states, its grants to the Health Department last year nearly exhausted its reserve fund, it has good reason to slash its appropriation to that agency. Moreover, the principle of using these contributed funds for demonstration work, rather than the maintenance of routine public service, has much in its favor.

Employes necessary for operation of the District's tuberculosis hospitals and clinics should be paid through the regular District budget. Their salaries are a proper charge against tax revenues. If Congress had appropriated even a major part of the fund requested by Dr. Ruhland to continue the city's fight against this plague, the Health Department would not have to depend upon a private organization for contributions.

The original fault thus goes back to the failure of Congress to supply the department with funds to make its health program fully effective. While this neglect continues, however, it is doubtful whether the Tuberculosis Association can spend its funds to better purpose than in supplementing the work of the public institutions.

It is the tone of the association's reply to Dr. Ruhland's request for continuation of the $11,300 grant which suggests that it may have been actuated by some motive other than the welfare of tuberculosis victims. The association finds itself "not only unappreciated for its past generosity, but under pressure and actual attack . . ." Its executive committee complains of "extraordinary pressure" to have the Health Department grant enlarged. If this chip on the association's shoulder is intended to express an unwillingness to cooperate with Dr. Ruhland, it may prove to be as detrimental to the D. T. A. as to the Health Department.

The Navy Bill

The discussions before the House Naval Affairs Committee on the subject of the Navy's future needs have been largely a debate over an uncertainty. As such it was necessarily inconclusive.

The Administration was defeated in its attempt to secure the committee's approval of a program calling for the construction during the next six years of 77 fighting ships and 125,000 tons of auxiliary vessels at an estimated cost of $1,300,000,000. Instead, the committee last week approved a bill authorizing about half as great an expansion as the Navy Department had originally requested and limiting this authorization to two years.

It must not be assumed, however, that this action constitutes either a defeat for the big Navy advocates or another Congressional victory for economy at all costs. The House committee showed that it is not unmindful of the need to economize wherever economies can safely be undertaken. But the members revealed no disposition to economize at the expense of national defense.

Actually, as Chairman Vinson has explained, "the two-year program will provide for all the ships we can build." Besides, he added, "world conditions may change before it is completed." Here we have the nub of the House committee's opposition to the original naval construction program. Yet this same element of uncertainty regarding the international situation as it may develop during the next years, explains the Navy Department's emphasis on the need of long-range planning for adequate naval defense under all conceivable circumstances.

Secretary Edison, Admiral Stark and the others who have been advocating the original naval expansion bill asked Congress, in effect, to prepare for the worst possible outcome of the present international situation. The committee, on the other hand, is not willing to act on any such assumption; the members are not ignoring the possibility that the international situation may take a turn for the better before the requested six-year program, or even a two-year program, can be completed.

In his testimony before the House committee last week, Secretary Edison discussed the possibility of a coalition of foreign powers against the United States. These powers were previously identified as Germany, Japan, Russia and Italy. With such a combination, he said, the present Navy cannot adequately cope.

The idea of these four powers forming an aggressive bloc against the United States seems, at the present moment, utterly fantastic. But officials entrusted with the technical problem of safeguarding the Nation against attack cannot so regard it. Nor can they safely assume that the Allies will be victorious in the present war. They prefer to make long-range plans whose execution would give the United States a margin of safety in any possible eventuality.

Chairman Vinson and his fellow members of the House Naval Affairs Committee apparently do not accept the gloomy picture of future possibilities drawn by the Navy Department. Even though they favor building as many ships as possible during the next two years, they prefer not to have on the books an authorization for naval expansion involving the ultimate expenditure of $1,300,000,000. They prefer to cross the bridge of our naval needs four or six years hence when they come to it.

In taking this unhysterical view they will probably have the approval of the great majority of Americans.

"If you will eat slowly, you will eat considerably less," asserts a physician. This is especially true if you eat at a boarding house.

It is no wonder the girls of the Gay Nineties seemed especially lively, what with red flannel underskirts and horsehair sofas.

The Post Impressionist

No High-Pressure Here

Tell the truth, I couldn't sell summer weather to the Russians. In fact, it's been a long time since I tried to sell anything. Somehow, I just wasn't cut out to be a salesman. I did have ambitions along that line once, but they were erased before I was solidly in my teens. I sold my share of newspapers, but in that case there was no bargain to strike. It was just a matter of having something that people wanted.

I went in the selling business only once. One of those "work your way through college" ads for a well-known brush company caught my eye. Despite the fact that I was having my troubles with seventh grade arithmetic at the time, I decided that it wouldn't be a bad idea to be independent. So I wrote for further details. In due time I received a satchel of samples as well as several dozen brooms and brushes.

There is one blessing a boy can have when it comes to going into the selling business, and that is plenty of relatives. As soon as I could get my goods unpacked, I grabbed a broom and ran over to Aunt Helen's. No, she didn't need a broom. She had just bought one. But then a boy as ambitious as I certainly needed encouragement. So, Aunt Helen bought my broom. It was the same story at my house. Mom bought a hair brush. Pop bought a shaving brush. Uncle Horace bought a clothes brush.

The money just rolled in. But, unfortunately, I ran out of relatives. Left on my own, I went from door to door. Occasionally I would run across some friend of the family and dispose of a broom or something. But there came a day when I eliminated friends of the family. Then business stopped.

In a nice letter from the company, I was informed that the money I had turned in represented its share of the goods sent me. The brushes and brooms that I still had in stock were mine and I had only to sell them to realize my profit.

On Saturdays, and on other days after school, I door-to-doored it. Somehow, I hardly could get a word in edgewise. Housewives were taking one look at me and saying, "No," before I could open my mouth. Then I ran into a streak where mothers sent little children to the door. After hearing some of these tots say, "Mama don't want no peas, no rice, no coconut oil," or the equivalent, I was ready to give up.

One day I worked my way to the middle of a block and came face to face with a brush salesman for the same company for which I wasn't selling anything. "How's business?" he asked in a cheery tone. I confessed. He said he had sold a long-handled brush three houses up the street.

He was a talkative guy and I listened attentively while he explained his selling technique.

"It's simple," he said. "Just ask the lady if she wants to buy a brush or broom, and if she says she keeps her house clean and doesn't need any new brushes or brooms, you just reach up and rub your fingers across the ledge of the transom over the door. It's dollars to doughnuts your fingers will be full of dust and dirt and she will be so ashamed that she will buy a brush."

In return for his instructions I agreed to walk three blocks away and leave this territory to him. However, I resolved to try his method.

I walked briskly to a door, rang the bell, stuck my head over toward the doorknob side to be ready, and waited. The housewife answered. I asked if she wanted to buy a brush or a broom and she said she did not. Then she added the lines I wanted to hear: "I manage to keep my house clean with the equipment I already have, thank you."

Then I was ready to play my ace. With an air of triumph, I raised my hand for the all-important ledge over the door. Then and only then did I realize—I could not reach it!

I was several years getting rid of the remainder of my stock. Then it was to Aunt Helen, Uncle Horace and the others. However, it proved one thing conclusively: I was not, and still am not, for that matter, a salesman.

However, the experience has made me an admirer of those with ability to sell.

The other day our doorbell rang. I thought it was a salesman. However, little Jake from across the way was there. It seems that Jake had been defeated by my boy, Ray, in a table tennis match at school. Jake had contended that the table was not regulation, so Ray had invited him to our house to play again on our table.

Jake came in. At my invitation he laid down his cornet and case, took off his paper bag and parked his books on a chair. Ray was not at home at the moment, so I told Jake that I would play him a game and get him "warmed up." He agreed. Just as we finished, Ray came in and the two youngsters were soon battling for all they were worth.

It was a best-two-out-of-three match. Jake won the first game. In the second game, Ray won. I was the only spectator as the rivals clashed in the deciding battle. It was pingpong of a do-or-die brand. The score went 2-2, 5-5, 9-9. A struggle for every point. Finally, Ray stepped out and made it 13-13. The boys were in the midst of a fine rally. The ball was sailing back and forth over the net. As he was sending the ball along, Ray remarked, "Looks like I've got you this time, Jake."

Jake smiled and, while still batting the ball, he turned his head my way suddenly and asked, "Want to buy a subscription to The Post?"

I'll wager Jake could sell winter weather to the Russians.

Mounting A Horse

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Of course it is useless and silly to argue with a hero-worshiper, but the dangerous influence exerted by your paper in the matter of mounting horses the suicidal way, is all that concerns me. I've seen too much horrible tragedy from this kind of carelessness to keep silent and allow innocent people to be deliberately misguided.

Mounting a horse probably is not a matter of style, custom, tradition, or opinion, but a mattter of sound, practical science and wise precaution based upon many generations of experience. Mounting a horse from his flank ranks with such practices as jay walking in the middle of the block from between two parked cars. You may get by with it a hundred times, but only once is necessary to kill a person or cripple one for life.

Since these hypnotized hero-worshipers cannot understand a sound logical argument by those who have only their safety in view, perhaps they can understand an example in plane geometry. I have taken the pains to draw the diagrams below especially for this type of person.

That pivot principle should stop all this silly and biased argument once and for all time.

LEROY LESTER BRANDT.

"Pinto Would Snort"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Last week when I saw the picture of Gene Autry mounting a horse in "real cowboy style" I had a good laugh over it.

I was born in Kentucky of a "hoss raisin'" family. At an early age I went to New Mexico, where I lived on a ranch (not a dude one) for more than 15 years. I have taught riding (gaited and jumping) in two outstanding girls' schools and one riding academy. I won a rodeo queenship three years straight, and when a child did trick riding.

I have also exhibited in riding and driving classes in the American Royal and National shows, Canada and elsewhere. My people owned a large stock farm in southeastern Oklahoma; so you see what little I know about riding and horses has come from experiences and observations on plantation, ranch, farm, in show rings and rodeos.

Understand, I'm not criticizing Mr. Autry's way of mounting—if it suits him, that's O. K. and he gets paid for it. But I've been "west of Chicago" and I know any real, honest-to-goodness old cowpuncher would get highly insulted if anyone told him to get on a horse that way, and the "pinto" would probably snort too.

Time For "Third Party"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The time to form a third political party is when there is no longer a second party.

Now is the time. It is necessary only to find a candidate who is against helping the farmer, against protecting the right of labor to an American standard of living, against ample relief for the submerged third of the people, against balancing the budget, who is in favor of higher taxes, in favor of political and private racketeering, in favor of keeping industry throttled by the blighting hands of bureaucracy, in favor of foreign "isms," in favor of immediate war.

In opposition to such a candidate the people can vote for any candidate already in the ring.

For Every American

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Your critic of drama, Nelson B. Bell, said of "Abe Lincoln in Illinois": "It is a play, in whatever form, that every American should see, not once but many times, in order that its message may be clearly heard and fully absorbed. It is as imperishable as the Stars and Stripes."

We agree with Mr. Bell wholeheartedly. And for that reason we wish to emphasize that it is a pity the Washington managers are excluding approximately one-third of the Americans who need to see it.

There are two considerations here. One is that America is a nation of minorities, and democracy means welding these minorities together. Pictures like this could do that job very well if they are allowed the chance.

The other is that the Washington community can lay no claim to a belief in this picture or in Abe Lincoln himself so long as it will tolerate the denial of the stand he took, evidenced by the exclusion of Negroes.

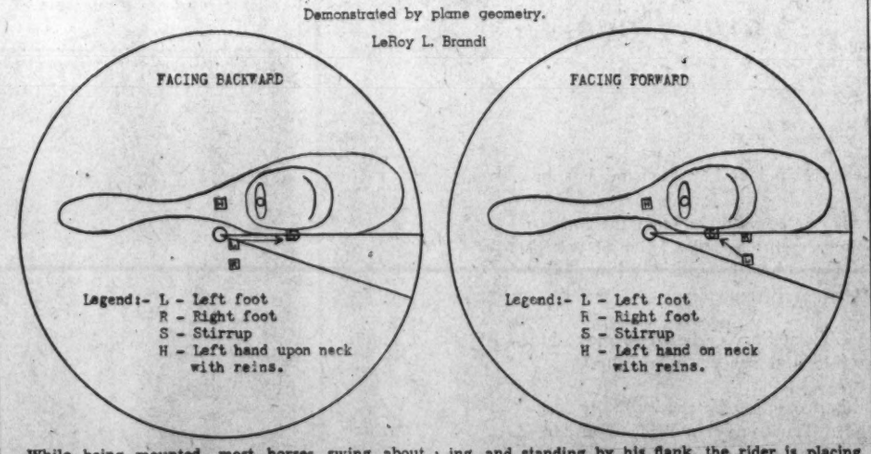
Lost Atlantis

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I look across the sea-strewn wrecks of time despoiled by man's cupidity to man—the fall of nations that ignobly ran their race against the march of truth sublime. Remote in primal dawns the teeming slime first felt the crude beginnings of a plan, destined the cosmic universe to scan, and rose persistent, patient in the climb. A past millenium we now recall, empirical—the wonder of a world; in glory set, in grandeur, girdle-bound. Religions, myths, traditions, legends all—are but the scattered remnants that impearled the sun of Lost Atlantis violet crowned.

FREDERICK FARRELL.
Washington, Jan. 31.



While being mounted, most horses swing about their fore feet as a pivot, either toward or away from the rider with their body. Therefore, the safest position for the rider to stand while gathering up the reins and preparing to mount is at the pivot facing backward with the left hand upon the top of the horse's neck.

In this position the right leg is entirely free to move forward, backward, or to either side in accordance with the movements of the horse, while the left foot is moved straight forward into the stirrup, and while the left arm serves as a brace and a telegraph. In this position the most active horse can neither jerk away, lunge forward, swing to the right or left, or foul the rider because he is at the pivot and aware of the horse's movements before they are fully executed.

It is impossible for the quickest of horses to jump and kick at a rider while in this position, and once the rider's foot is in the stirrup he can spin like a top if he likes without throwing the rider because the rider is in the center of the spin.

By approaching a horse from the rear while mounting, and standing by his flank, the rider is placing himself in a dangerous and awkward position and giving the horse every advantage to perform capers. The horse can lunge forward and kick at the rider, possibly jerking him off his feet, and if his foot is already in one stirrup he may be dragged to death.

He may swing either way and foul the rider because he is far away from the pivot and a victim of the leverage of the horse's body. The rider fouls himself when he places his left foot in the stirrup facing forward, because he crosses his left leg in front of his right, leaving the latter cramped in a vice next to the horse's flank.

If the horse spins as he is mounted, the rider is swung away from the saddle instead of into it, because he is too far from the pivot. With the right leg down under the flank of the horse, it is more difficult to clear the horse's back and hips as the rider swings aboard, than by the other method which provides a wide arc.

Mounting a horse properly is not a matter of style, custom, tradition, or opinion, but a matter of practical science and wise precaution.

Taxpayer's Lament

A PERSON WANTS to be careful not to speak out of turn these days, and I don't know but that I am leading with my chin when I suggest that a man who pays an income tax is as good as the man who doesn't, and ought to have the same rights. I am thinking of the inequality between the status of minor children of income taxpayers and that of the young people whom the New Deal classifies as youth. The minor child of a taxpayer is deemed to be old enough to get out and scuffle for his or her own living at the age of 18, but youth is officially regarded as dependent up to the age of 25.

The taxpayer is allowed to deduct $400 a year from his income for each dependent child under the age of 18. The deduction is not allowed after that, even though the expense of clothing and educating a young man or woman obviously is greater than that of maintaining a child.

They eat more at 18 than they do at, say, 8; they need a little money for cigarettes, phone calls, gas and dates, and their education at that stage of the game calls for tuition and rather expensive books. But the Government's theory holds that any young one who can't make his or her own way after 18 is a loafer if the old man is an income taxpayer, but that this large class known as youth should be subsidized and gentled along much further, in fact, up to the age of 25.

Child's Income Goes Into Family Kitty

THE INCOME TAXPAYER is compelled to pay for the education and support of his neighbor's children beyond 18, but is supposed to kick out his own into the weather—which is rather severe at the current writing.

Worse than that, if a taxpayer's kid does show a dash of speed, intelligence and ability, and earns an income by his own efforts, the Government then reverses its position and holds that, although he is not any longer a dependent of the old gent, nevertheless, the young one's income belongs to the family kitty, in the old man's name.

Even though the kid has supported himself with his earnings in conformity with the Treasury's rules of domestic economy laid down for income taxpayers, the sum of his earnings is added to the old man's in order to boost the old man's figure into a higher bracket. Thus in one case with which I am familiar the kid's earnings of about $25 a week cost the father about $300 in surtaxes, which promptly was distributed among the offspring of nonpayers for their assistance in the difficult years beyond 18.

Take This Case Of Working Girl

IN ANOTHER CASE a young woman earning a pretty good salary, but nothing scandalous, is not permitted to make any deduction for the support and education of her younger sister who is 20, the girls being on their own. Naturally, the wage-earning young woman bares her pearly fangs and snarls slightly over the proposition that her sister is less entitled to a few honest comforts and a thin smear of learning than the young mugs around and about them who are allowed to put in for assistance because their parents are doing poorly. Her annoyance is aggravated by the knowledge that some portion of the take which the Government razors off the top of her salary is used for the assistance of those who are—outwardly, anyway—no better than her young sister.

It may have been observed, too, that there is now in the works in Washington a ballyhoo to increase the assitance to the scions of nonpayers of the income tax and to set the knives to take a little deeper cut of such salaries as this young woman's.

The same general discrimination against the taxpaying type of citizen exists in the problem of allowances for the support of dependents who are not children. If they are clear out of the youth zone as to age on the night side of decrepitude and in tolerable health, no deduction may be made for their support even though the taxpayer's private assistance is all that keeps them off the public assistance rolls.

$400 Exemption Called Substandard

BUT AT THE SAME time other citizens, including whole families of them, are supported—not luxuriously, it is true—on funds contributed by the same taxpayer, and, often, at a rate higher than the figure of $400 a year per person, which is all that the Government deems necessary for the support of any legal dependent of the taxpayer, except his wife or her husband.

I do not know who it was that hit upon the figure of $400 a year as adequate for the support of a human being, even in a separate domicile, or how he arrived at that sum. Certainly it is a substandard figure, and everyone has heard the angry outcry that has been raised by New Deal social planners in recent years over the ghastly situation of people whose earnings are down around there, not counting their quarters and something in the way of food.

But I hedge away from questions or adequacy and confine my discussion to the obvious and insulting discrimination against the kin of the taxpayer.

What have we against income taxpayers, anyway, that we place the breed in a human category below that of the nons?

The Balkan Tangle

By Barnet Nover

After The Belgrade Meeting

AT THE BELGRADE meeting of the Balkan Entente, last week, the absentees overshadowed the participants.

The foreign ministers of Rumania, Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey were there in person. They did the talking. But what they had to say had much less to do with the outcome of the conference than what was said in other capitals, particularly Berlin, Moscow and Rome.

ALL THE BALKAN nations find themselves today in more or less the same predicament. All of them want to remain at peace. But the rocky peninsula they jointly inhabit happens to be on the edge of a war which threatens to spread in their direction.

Nobody knows this better than the statesmen who participated in the Belgrade conference. They also realize that however weak their nations may be individually they have sufficient strength as a bloc to give pause to any potential aggressor. And they are also aware that the more united they are the better their chances of getting aid from the Allies should they be attacked.

For some time Great Britain and France have been accumulating a force in the Near East which could be used to assist the Balkan powers if the war spreads in their direction.

AT BELGRADE, however, the conference fought shy of the unity issue. And they did so, in large measure, because some of them are as much frightened by unity as they are by the threat of war.

What would unity mean? It would mean a pooling of the fighting strength of Rumania, Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey against any nation which tries to invade the peninsula.

That can mean Germany. It can mean Russia. It might also mean Italy, despite the fact that Italy seems at the moment determined on staying out of war. And should a war develop in the Balkans it is possible that the Balkan Allies would also have to reckon on the hostility of Bulgaria and Hungary.

NOW AS IT happens not all of the Balkan nations are afraid of the same potential aggressors. Rumania, today, is more fearful of Russia than of Germany, which can get more out of Carol's kingdom by squeezing than by invasion. Yugoslavia, on the other hand, is more fearful of Germany than of Russia. Greece happens to be far enough away from both of these great powers to believe that her peace and neutrality might be preserved simply by doing nothing. The nation she most fears is Italy.

The result is disunity. And it is a disunity which not only Russia and Germany but also Italy have sought to foster.

WHY MOSCOW and Berlin are opposed to the formation of a Balkan bloc is obvious. Such a bloc might prove a formidable obstacle, not merely to armed aggression, but Germany also is afraid that Balkan unity would give the individual Balkan nations enough courage to resist the Reich's increasingly imperious economic demands.

The Italian position, however, is not quite so clear. For Italy does not want the war to spread into the Balkans. She is particularly fearful of having Russia get a foothold in there. Nor would it serve any Italian purpose to have Hitler add Balkan territory to the Reich. For these reasons it has been assumed that Italy was willing and even eager to see a Balkan bloc established as the only certain means of preventing war in that corner of Europe.

HOWEVER, that theory ignores the realties of Italian foreign policy. Italy is unquestionably worried by the possibility of a Russian thrust in the direction of the Balkans, not only because that would bring the Red peril nearer home, but particularly because a Russian invasion of, say, Rumania, would almost inevitably be accompanied or followed by a German invasion to safeguard for the Reich the oil and wheat supplies without which Germany's plight would be worse than it is. It would then be utterly impossible for Rome to preserve even the fiction of the Berlin-Rome axis, which still has its uses for the Italian kingdom.

On the other hand, Mussolini realizes that while a Balkan bloc could easily be made the instrument of Allied economic pressure against the Third Reich and even, under certain circumstances, of Allied military pressure, the fact is not being ignored in Rome that the only Balkan power actively allied to Great Britain and France, namely, Turkey, is also the one which has been preaching Balkan unity with greatest vigor. And once the Allies became paramount in the Balkans, Italian friendship would lose much of its value for Hungary and Bulgaria.

Mussolini wants the Balkans to remain at peace. But he also does not want to see the Italian stake in that region reduced in value and importance. That is why he has opposed the creation of a Balkan bloc, the immediate effect of which would be a change in the Balkan balance of power to Italy's disadvantage. And he has found much support for his program of disunity in the conflicting fears of the Balkan nations.

Pardon Weighed For Edith Maxwell

They quote her as saying she wants a little more time to make the adjustments it will be necessary for her to make when the day comes for her to return to society.

In the first few months after she began to serve her sentence December 1, 1937, Edith, authorities said, "was nearly hounded to death" by individuals who sought to carry out various schemes for promoting her story and circumstances.

More recently, however, farm officials have made it possible for Edith to retire from the public eye and to live quietly and adapt herself to prison routine. She has been quoted as saying she is happy—or, at least, contented—in her new surroundings.

Edith has been employed in the prison office. Whether or not the work she is doing there represents the kind of employment she intends to seek after she gets her freedom, Edith's friends are certain of one thing—that she will never return to the teaching profession.

Time and again Edith has told members of her family and friends that she had come to "hate" teaching and that whenever she became free she would earn her livelihood in other fields.

Edith was 22 years old when she began her prison sentence in December, 1937. She would be a middle-aged woman at the expiration of the full term.

The case of Edith Maxwell goes back to the evening of July 21, 1935. It was that evening that Trigg Maxwell after a quarrel with Edith and other members of his family was killed—or died, as the defense at one of her trials suggested, of a heart attack.

The charge was that he had been killed by a blow on the head delivered by his daughter while he and Edith were struggling in their home at The Pound.

Edith admitted striking her father with a slipper. The State charged Trigg Maxwell died of blows from such an instrument as an ax, and although the death instrument was never found, the prosecution at Edith's second trial produced a small ax and tried to suggest a similarity between it and whatever it was that caused the murder. The ax was ruled out as evidence.

After conviction at her first trial in November, 1935, Edith was sentenced to 25 years in prison. A clamor of protest immediately followed from women's organizations, civic groups and many newspapers.

Objectors cited Edith's age, the failure of the State to produce the death instrument, evidence introduced by the defense to show that Maxwell had been drinking beer and that Edith had struck in self-fense.

The cause of the quarrel between father and daughter aroused public interest probably as much as any other factor. Edith, it was said, was being punished by Trigg Maxwell because she stayed away from home after dark.

Readers of The Washington Post helped Edith get a second trial by contributing to the Edith Maxwell Defense Fund of which The Post was custodian.

The Post engaged Charles Henry Smith of Alexandria to defend the girl and carry her fight to the appeals court.

December 17, 1936, another jury at Wise, Va., found Edith guilty of second-degree murder and fixed her punishment at 20 years.

The following March 9 Judge Ezra T. Carter, who had presided at the second trial, overruled a motion for a third trial. The defense had based its third-trial plea on introduction as evidence of neighbors' tales of squabblings among Edith, her father and Mrs. Ann Maxwell, her mother, on presentation of the ax, and on description, in testimony, of the muddy creek in the rear of the Maxwell home. The prosecution suggested the creek as a place where the death instrument might have been disposed of.

Attorney Smith went again to the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals, but the second conviction was affirmed. Edith heard the news on a radio while staying with a relative near Drewry's Bluff, Va.

The Green Lights

By Ernest K. Lindley

New Deal Traffic Signals

ACCORDING TO ONE of my columnar colleagues, the President is conducting all the traffic in the Democratic preconvention campaign. We are told that he gave "the green light" to Paul V. McNutt, and let McNutt speed ahead until he skidded off the road. Now, we are told, he has given "the green light" to Burton K. Wheeler.

"The green light" is the newest gag-line among a few members of the inner circle of the New Deal. They would give the impression that every time a Presidential aspirant opens his mouth it is on direct orders from the inner circle of the New Deal, if not from the President himself.

Next, probably, we will be told that the President gave John L. Lewis "the green light" to proclaim that the President would be "defeated ignominously" if he should run for a third term.

Maybe this column has become color blind, but it has noticed only two green lights. One was the green light for Harry L. Hopkins, which was switched on more than a year ago. This green light went on as if it were being handled by the masterly hand of the President himself. It went on when Hopkins was transferred from the wilds of WPA and designated to be the President's chief patrolman in the business section. Unfortunately, Hopkins became seriously ill. Nobody knows or ever will know how far he could have traveled on green lights along the slippery road toward the Presidential nomination.

Another Green Light For The Third Term

THE OTHER green light has been for a third term. This has been handled by the New Deal underlings, but with the benevolent approval and sometimes with the expert assistance of the chief signalman in the White House. Even the New Deal lieutenants aren't sure whether the President is just a pace-setter who intends to drop out just before he reaches the tape, or whether he really wants a green light all the way.

There was a third and smaller green light three years ago for Robert H. Jackson. It was intended to let him get to the Executive Mansion at Albany. If he had got that far, the bigger green light would have been flashed. But Jackson was blocked by the ample machine steered by James A. Farley. Besides, Jackson, in an unobservant moment, had let the careless New Deal crew fill his tank with a poor grade of fuel.

Those are the only green lights observed so far by this column. There have been red lights, and there have been the blinking yellow lights which, in Washington, mean "proceed at your own risk."

The red light was flashed on John N. Garner before he had moved an inch. In plain defiance of the traffic regulations he has run through a whole series of red lights, but it now looks as if he were stopped. The red lights were flashed also on such potential competitors as Harry F. Byrd, Millard Tydings, Edward Burke and Walter F. George. So far none of them has been observed running through a red light.

Best For McNutt Was Blinking Yellow

THE MOST FAVORABLE signal that McNutt ever got was the blinking yellow. McNutt is a fast and skillful driver. He was moving ahead so rapidly that Harold L. Ickes, with the collaboration of a few other New Dealers, frantically switched on a red light. McNutt, in this column's opinion, cannot be stopped by Harold Ickes. He has been delayed for further inspection. Internal Revenue agents have been checking McNutt and all his political mechanics in Indiana. The latest word is that they will be finished within another week or two. Unofficially the word has been spread around that McNutt passed the test 100 per cent. The McNutt rooters predict that his chief aides will also emerge unscathed from a rigorous check-up. John L. Lewis took a crack at McNutt, but it was mild compared to his crack at the President.

The most that Hull has received, in this column's vision, is the yellow blinker. Hull hasn't started moving yet. Some New Dealers assert confidently that if he goes far the red light will be flashed. But other, and perhaps more astute, observers, including Jim Farley, decided long ago that the President would never have the heart to stop Hull.

Farley And Wallace Get No Signals

FARLEY HAS NOT been given the green light. Neither has Henry A. Wallace. They are both confronted with the yellow blinkers. Farley seems to be inclined to take his chances. Wallace hesitates.

Observers of the Democratic traffic should watch for a big green light for Attorney General Robert H. Jackson. Farley still stands in his way, but Jackson has all the earmarks of a winner if he can get a clear lane. The White House would never flash the red light on him.

So far as the White House is in control there would be green lights all the way for Fiorello LeGuardia, if he could only qualify. William O. Douglas is laid up in the Supreme Court, but long-shot fanciers shouldn't forget him.

There are other green lights flashing on the Democratic Presidential highways, but most of them are self-manipulated.

Artists Offer Works for Sale To Aid Finns

The Washington Unit of the Finnish Relief Fund has received 100 works of art from 51 artists, all but one of whom are Washingtonians, for sale at two public art auctions with proceeds to go to the fund, officers of the organization announced yesterday.

Half of the contributions will be placed on sale Thursday at 5 p. m. at the Shoreham Hotel, and the others will be put on the block Saturday at 8:30 p. m. at the Raleigh Hotel. Works of art will be on public view all day on the days scheduled for their sale.

The Weakness Of Russia

FROM both a military and ideological standpoint, the extreme weakness of Russia is an emerging phenomenon of great importance. Communism, it would appear, has not made Russia a strong state, but an extremely weak one; Hitler, while he may have little to expect in the way of aid from that quarter, also has nothing to fear; whereas, at the outbreak of the war it looked as though Stalin might have stolen a march on Hitler and as though the latter might, in a sense, become Stalin's prisoner, the reverse is now true.

For the first time in centuries, a Russian attempt to advance in the Baltic has met the isolated resistance of a single small country: Finland. In the past Russian westward imperialism clashed with one or another of the great powers in the Baltic. But Russia is this time having difficulty in conquering a nation whose whole population is about the size of Brooklyn's.

Those who know Baltic history and previous strategies best say that the difficulties that the Soviets are having in Finland are due to the low morale of the army, its general inefficiency because of the successive purges of officers and the bad communication facilities. But they add that the real failure is due to the fact that the Soviets are attempting a land invasion of a country that strategy demands should be invaded by sea. And Russians are notoriously bad seamen. Neither in the present nor in the past has Russia ever risked a decisive naval engagement in the Baltic.

Is Stalin Afraid Of Estonia?

THE RUSSIAN weakness is further indicated in the attitude she is taking toward the other small Baltic states with which she concluded pacts and from which she won concessions: Estonia and Latvia.

The theory seems to be current that Estonia, having granted Russia a naval base, is in Russia's pocket. Actually, Stalin seems to be at least as afraid of Estonia as Estonia is of Russia. The treaties with Estonia and Latvia demand that these two nations are to come to Russia's assistance "in case Russia is attacked by one of the great powers." The latitude of treaties being what it is in the present day, and since Russia claims that the Finnish war is really part of an Anglo-French campaign against the Soviet Union, Russia could certainly find grounds for invoking these clauses. But she does not. The Estonians are quite openly pro-Finnish; the Estonian press headlines every Finnish victory; the two Baltic countries are quite outspoken in their refusal to collaborate in any action against the Finns. And although the Soviets recognize only the Kuusinen puppet government, the Baltic states with which she has treaties recognize Helsinki.

And it is generally believed that Gen. Laidoner, of Estonia, on a recent visit to Moscow told Stalin that Estonia and Latvia would never lift a finger against Finland, and that Stalin took the statement very meekly. In Estonia itself the Russians are behaving in a quite bourgeoise manner and paying for all the supplies they get in American dollars.

If Russia is as weak as she seems to be, Hitler, whose secret service is excellent, certainly knew it when he concluded his pact. And we may presume that he has set strict limits to the Russian advance in the Baltic. Certainly, Stalin is in no position to pick a fight with Germany. It is possible that he counted on a big offensive in the west, which would seriously engage Germany, whereupon he could scavenge against her in the east at no great risk. But the offensive does not materialize; Hitler's forces are not seriously engaged; it is possible, and even probable, that no mass war or movement which would demand the whole German army will ever develop in the west at all, so it is Stalin that is caught, rather than Hitler.

It was reported last week that the Germans have begun a systematic infiltration into Polish Galicia, which has a frontier on Rumania. This part of Poland was given to Russia in the division, but the Germans, apparently, are simply taking it over from Russia, and Russia is not protesting. It is strategically very important; it gives the Germans opportunity for further pressure upon Rumania, and it is materially important, for it gives to Germany the right to exploit the Galician oil fields and the railroads of the district so as to assure the transport of oil and other products from Rumania.

Mussolini Plays Hitler's Game

MEANWHILE, MUSSOLINI, by balking Russia in the Balkans, is definitely playing Hitler's game—and, of course, his own. The effect is to shut out the influence of the Allies, who are far away. So far, then, the net result of Finland's heroic resistance in the larger issues of the war has been of aid to Hitler—it has secured for him Galicia and access to Rumania.

If Russia conquers Finland, it is a great question whether she actually could conquer Sweden and Norway. And it would seem quite certain that Germany would not allow this. Germany would probably occupy Sweden, to defend her supplies there, especially iron, and the probability is that Sweden would let her do so. For the Swedes could hardly get effective aid from any one else, and might prefer Germans, even Nazis, to Russians. At any rate, no power or combination of powers could stop Germany from sending a force to Scandinavia.

It would therefore seem that whatever the outcome of the Finnish war. Stalin will eventually be the loser in it, as he was the loser in the Polish war! He will eventually be cheated by Hitler and Mussolini, and even against Hitler he cannot win a single real friend in the Baltic or the Balkans. In war times ideological considerations are likely to give way before historical experiences. The aim of the Baltic peoples for centuries has been to keep Russia out. Notable in the last Hitler speech—particularly when one hears it, rather than when one reads it—was the cavalier, almost contemptuous way in which he slid over his relations with Russia.

The evacuation of certain Germans from the Baltic countries and their settlement in the new German Poland might look at first sight as a victory in the Baltic for Stalin. On second consideration it does not. It is probable that what Hitler is building up in German Poland are new settlements and corps of legionnaires, who, unless the war is decisively won by the Allies, will certainly be outposts for conquests in the east.

Also, Hitler is less afraid of Communist propaganda in Germany than are the statesmen of other countries. He does not fear a revolution from the left. If a revolution from the left will serve his purposes, he will make it himself. But the Communists who are now concentrating their entire energies upon spreading defeatism and division in the western countries are extremely useful to Hitler. It is quite possible, as was reported last week, that he has allowed the Comintern to set up a broadcasting station on German soil.

Coughlin Off Air; Hints 'Events' to Come Will Explain

Detroit, Feb. 4 (U.P.).—The Rev. Charles E. Coughlin failed to make his regular broadcast today. The only explanation given by the announcer was that probably events transpiring this week will enlighten you."

The announcer said the priest would return to the air next Sunday.

"I am instructed to say," said the announcer, "'pay no heed to idle rumors which will be circulated this week. Be assured that Father Coughlin knows . . . why neither he nor any other person is speaking over his microphone today. Probably events transpiring this week will enlighten you.'"

Another announcement warned "do not be alarmed. We expect Father Coughlin will return to the air next Sunday." The announcer asked for a large audience then.

So just book yourself
And a home trip try;
You'll get no blank looks
Asking "Ham on rye."

Hialeah Reactions

The pink flamingoes pretty are—
They stand there in the sun,
And never seem the least concerned
About which horse has won.

They move about in regal calm
In striking contrast to
The humans who are all agog
About what they should do.

They grace the infield prettily
With interest quite lax
In what is going on, and don't Behave like maniacs.

It bothers me at Hialeah
To watch these birds each day . . .
I wish that I could be as calm
At that race track as they!

Cornelia Otis Skinner To Revive 'Una-Dramas'

Brings Three Hits to National Feb. 26; Gloria Jean Profits From Capital Visit; This, That and the Other About the Theater

THE PHENOMENON of a multipeopled cast wrapped up in the versatile talents of a single artiste again will be demonstrated to Washington theatergoers when Cornelia Otis Skinner comes to the National Theater for a week's engagement, beginning Monday, February 26.

BELL

Having last been seen in a professional engagement in the Capital in the title role of Shaw's "Candida," Miss Skinner this season reverts to rograms of her unique "una-dramas" and cameo character sketches. "Edna His Wife," her own single-actress dramatization of the Margaret Ayer Barnes novel, will be the star's featured "solo-drama" every evening except Wednesday. "The Loves of Charles II" will be presented Wednesday matinee and night and the "The Empress Eugenie" at the Saturday matinee.

Three original, modern character sketches will precede "The Loves of Charles II" and "The Empress Eugenie." "Edna His Wife" is of full-evening proportions and was an instant hit when introduced to the stage in this city some two or three seasons ago.

Miss Skinner is the one actress I know who would require a dozen understudies to take her place.

Overheard at Loew's Capitol Theater last Friday afternoon while the Eight Melody Men were singing a medley of Stephen C. Foster's songs in the "Barn Dance" stage revue: "Humph," humphed a contemptuous matron to her seatmate, "they've got a nerve. They stole every one of those songs from 'Swanee River'." To which her equally contemptuous companion replied, "I'll say!" That whirring sound is Foster turning in his grave.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt heads the list of sponsors of the concert appearance of Caterina Jarboro, Negro opera star, at the Metropolitan A. M. E. Church on Friday night of this week. The widely acclaimed Negro artiste, just back from a successful European tour, will be presented in the Capital under the auspices of the Committee of Washington for the benefit of Bethune-Cookman College, Daytona Beach, Fla. Others of note on the list of sponsors include Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., Mrs. Robert H. Jackson, Mrs. Hugo Black, Mrs. Stanley Reed, Miss Josephine Roche, Representative Caroline O'Day, Senator Theodore F. Green, Oscar Chapman, Dr. Will Alexander, Aubrey Williams and Senator Joseph F. Guffey.

Lost and Not Found Department: The characters of little Wade Hamilton, Scarlett O'Hara's first-born, and Will Benteen, the one-legged savior of Tara, in "Gone With the Wind" . . . Means of eradicating that woman in the seat ahead, who still refuses to remove the Babylonian garden she wears under the delusion that it is a hat . . . A similar germicide for the lout behind, who keeps time with his foot on the back of your nerves . . . The reform that was to make main titles and trailers for feature pictures items of elucidation, instead of eye-strain . . . The ditto that was to produce a new name for "trailers"—which come before, instead of after, the pictures they advertise.

Dealing "lightly but significantly" with the problem of Washington's repeated failures to meet its Community Chest gosis, a brief dramatic playlet, "Clouds Over Washington," will be presented tonight at the Community Chest annual meeting in the United States Chamber of Commerce Building. The skit will be produced by a cast of eight Civic Theater players, headed by Mrs. David H. Kushner, who also is directing.

Most unexpected laugh of the week: In that eerie scene in "The Invisible Man Returns," when Dr. Frank Griffin draws an invisible blood specimen from an invisible vein in the invisible arm of the invisible Geoffrey Radcliffe, holds the apparently empty tube up to th light and remarks, "Well, there it is—I hope!" Audience reaction is as explosive as a depth bomb.

When the Chicago company of "Life With Father" appears in its first performance of the Howard Lindsay-Russel Crouse hit in the Maryland Theater, Baltimore, a week from tonight, the house will have been completely sold out before the doors are opened. The advance sale, with ticket lines running around the block, has broken all Baltimore records. The Chicago cast of the play that packed the National Theater at the President's birthday "command performance" a week ago last night, is headed by Percy Waram, in the title role, and Lillian Gish, as his wife, Vinnie. After a week in the Monumental City, "Life With Father," in its second incarnation, goes directly into the Blackstone Theater, Chicago, for a run

Absent from the screen too long and absent from Washington even longer, the debonair, jovial and hard-bitten screen actor, Edmund Lowe, will bring his own company of players to town to headline the stage bill at the Atlas Theater, 1331 H street northeast, next Friday through Tuesday. Famous as the Sergt. Quirt opposite Victor McLaglen's Capt. Flagg, Eddie has not been seen here "in the flesh" since his long-ago week of personal appearances at Loew's Capitol Theater. Wonder if he still has to mascara his blonde mustache to make it visible and devilish for the cameras?

Impressed by the newspaper articles, newsreel shots and enthusiastic reception accorded little Gloria Jean when she was a visitor at the President's birthday celebrations, Nate J. Blumberg, president of Universal Pictures, who stopped off in Washington last weekend on his way to Miami, has no intention of ignoring her popularity. Having scored a personal triumph in her first picture, "The Underpup," 11-year-old Gloria now has three others lined up for her. The first is "If I Had My Way," with Bing Crosby; the second, "Our City," costarred with Loretta Young and the third, "Two Stars of the Gold Coast," with Marlene Dietrich. Then there is that concert tour to Australia, too.

Hollywood-Chorus Note

"Backward, turn backward, oh, Time, in thy flight . . ."

In Hollywood

Hollywood, Feb. 5.

At last I've seen "Pinocchio" which technically is as far ahead of "Snow White" as Snow White was ahead of everything. The most interesting character to me was Jiminy Cricket. And mark my words, Cliff Edwards, whose voice they used, will have a new career because of it. He was wonderful. As far as story was concerned, it didn't thrill me as much as "Snow White," but then I'm a push-over for those dwarfs. Disney is out-running himself so fast that when the big, bad wolf came on dressed as a ham actor, he seemed a little old-fashioned. And we've very few sirens in town who have the "comph" that Cleo the goldfish possesses. And which she used on Figaro the cat. In one sequence he almost grew fins to keep pace with her. It took Disney to create a Dream Princess, the Blue Fairy. She's every producer's dream of a motion picture star. The whale gives you some terrifying moments, and I don't think they made enough of Geppetto setting up housekeeping inside him. Coming out, I bumped into Shirley Temple and asked: "Weren't you scared of the whale?" She said: "Scared? Why, no." Then I realized she's the little girl who listens nightly to the most blood-curdling radio programs that come out over the ether. Well, here is Disney's present to all kids from 7 to 70. I don't have to tell you not to miss it, for you'll be fighting your way.

HOPPER

George Schaefer and Harry Edington, head of RKO, have been huddling at Palm Springs and have made plans for some sensational pictures. One is Dreiser's "Sister Carrie." They not only own it, but already cleared it through the Hays office. Ann Shirley's contract is being picked up and she's going to get the build-up she's deserved for a long time. I'm sworn to secrecy on the first deal for Charles Laughton, but it's a lulu! They're going to do "Cyrano de Bergerac" with—guess who—Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh! . . . Keep your eyes peeled on RKO. They're out to make film history.

I wonder how many of you remember that famous street singer, Arthur Tracy. After making three or four pictures here and cleaning up a million or so in England, Tracy suddenly dropped from sight. But he isn't the down-and-out-has-been that many ex stars are today. Arthur was plenty shrewd with his money, bought a plot of property in Brentwood Hills, Washington and in Oxford Heights, Philadelphia, invested $1,000,000 in cash while the Government loaned him $11,000,000 more, and built a housing project for thousands of families, with stores, theaters, bowling alleys, etc. As a result, he's one of the most prosperous realtors in the country, and the beauty of it, he grins, "is that now whenever I feel like being the 'Street Singer' a I can go to Washington or Philadelphia, pick a corner and sing all I want to and at least 600 tenants have to listen because they can't tell the landlord to shut up!"

Tickets for Jack Barrymore's play, "My Dear Children," were printed on bronze, at a cost of 40 cents each. Author Jerry Horwin says that's to make the evening one that nobody will forget because they'll never throw the stubs away. The longer the play runs the better it is for Elaine Barry, who still owns a good piece of it. Wish I could have been present. Jack made history again. And you won't need any bronze tickets to remember it.

Even though Bobby Stack is in New York, I don't think wedding bells will ever ring for him and Corinna Wright, jr. Too many Wrights stacked against Bob make it all wrong . . . News of the exhibition given the Dead End Kids at the Club 18 in New York has leaked back here. Those boys should know how to take life. When being ribbed good-naturedly by professionals like Frankie Hyres and Jackie White they offered to punch people in the nose.

The "Information, Please" quartet are afraid to see their own shorts. They have five more to do—and feel if they get a good look at themselves they won't want to finish out the contract. Don't worry, boys, no matter how you look, you're terrific.

ROSALIND RUSSELL

Earthquake Scenes Thrill At Trans-Lux

The first pictures of the tragic earthquake in Turkey steal the headlines in the pictorial news section at the Trans-Lux Theater this week. These pictures, held up for so long a time because of the necessity of not disclosing damage done to key fortification points, reveal horror even worse, if possible, than the movie audience has become accustomed to see from the war zone.

The war specials are enlightening in their broad scope, from the bomb fires in Finland to the huge howitzers roaring on the Western front. These interesting war pictures give first glimpses of Hore-Belisha's farewell as Britain's War Minister; French Commander Gamelin decorating Generals Ironsides and Gort; remains of the British "Trinity" lightship bombed by Nazis, and the arrival of the first picturesque, turbaned, colonial troops arriving with their mules in France. Prime Minister Chamberlain delivers his famous speech on the history of the war to date, and the first Norwegian volunteers are shown leaving for the Finland front.

Topping the domestic scene are the rapid shots of the various President Birthday Balls, climaxing with the President's mother cutting the cake in New York City, and his wife doing the honors in Washington. The Ohio River is frozen solid for the first time since 1918 and the fourth time in history. Huge mills at last are turning out news print in the South from pine pulp, an industry that might save the South economically.

In styles the ladies find the last word in evening and retiring gowns, while sports run the gauntlet, from Golden Gloves and golf to a new England ski train.

There are plenty of laughs in the latest Our Gang comedy "Dad for a Day." "Winter Playground" is another sport subject filmed in the snow-bound Province of Quebec. "Goofey and Wilbur" is the Disney color cartoon.

Howard

Alive and jumping every minute from opening 'til closing curtain, the Howard Theater this week unwinds a footli ht offering primed with such sepia stars as Earl Hines, Catherine Perry, and Smiles and Smiles. It packs a potent entertainment punch.

Earl "Father" Hines leads his Grand Terrace Band through a barrage of hit tunes, saturated with swing syncopation, the hotter numbers being their own "Grand Terrace Stomp" and original arrangements of "Ridin' and Jivin'," and "Riff Medley." Deep-throated Catherine Perry scores with her famed "Careless," and a local tan lad, Billie Eckstine, clicked solidly with his singing of "Indian Summer."

Other highlights are supplied by Smiles and Smiles, a classy sepia hoofing duo, with plenty on the ball; the Three Speed Kings, in rapid-fire precision routines; Mason & Vigal, holdover comics, who are registering better each week, and the Addison Carey chorines, fronted by soubrette Deanie Larry.

On the screen is "Call a Messenger," with Huntz Hall and Billy Halop, of "Dead End" fame, teamed for the first time with the "Little Tough Guys."

Gayety

After an absence of almost a year, Hinda Wassau, one of burlesque's most versatile artists and a prime local favorite, returns to the Gayety with her new and elaborate edition of "Hindu Belles of 1940."

There was some disappointment yesterday that the devastating Hinda didn't deliver a song or two, but she more than made up for this by several specialties presented in typical Wassau style. Her wardrobe is something to marvel at.

Jean Mode, blonde and possessing a million-dollar smile, is one of the real sensations of the production. Miss Mode, who is making her initial appearance here, is a handsome young woman, whose beauty parades and manner of presentation should be given greater play.

The comedy end of the revue finds such funsters as Freddy Binder, Jack Rosen and Billy Wallace offering much in the way of wit and humor. Although quite a bit of slapstick prevails, the laughs are fast and furious. Jimmy Francis and Franklin Hopkins render valuable aid to the stellar trio.

On the distaff side of the bill are such fine entertainers as Pat Paige, Phyliss Merill and Rita Montez. Miss Paige is one of burlesque's best "talking women," while Miss Merrill's acrobatic dancing is nothing short of sensational.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Feb. 4.

BEAUTY DEPT.: Greta Garbo, accompanied by Gaylord Hauser, was introduced to Princess Kapurthala . . . "Tell me frankly," Garbo asked, "do you think I would be a success in India?" . . . The Princess surveyed Garbo's mannish attire, her flat-heel shoes and the absence of make-up. "If you change your shoes, polish your nails and comb your hair," replied the Princess, "—you might."

ILLUSTRATED SECTION: Some months ago Pic magazine published an article about an ichthyologist in Montreal who had thrown a live salmon from the top of a 15-story building. The salmon is alleged to have survived . . . The editors received so many letters from disbelievers that they decided Thursday to make a test. Photographers were stationed downstairs to record the truth—while the editors, carrying live carp, went to the roof of the Street & Smith Building and tossed two carp into the street . . . The fish landed—smashed and dead.

BUSINESS DEPT.: Tommy Manville, who attended the John Barrymore premiere, was advised to sue the actor, because he mentions Tommy's name in the play . . . "Why should I sue?" Manville answered. "Barrymore has become my only rival—but not for long" . . . And so Manville will foot the bill at a Leon & Eddie party February 11—where the guests will be all the cloakroom girls in New York.

DRAMA DEPT.: Mary Pickford read the reports of Barrymore's reunion with Elaine and said: "When I was 14, John was my idol, my dream man. It saddens me to think about it" . . . "You mean—to think about the change which has come over him?" Miss Pickford was asked . . . "Yes," she sighed—"and that I'm no longer 14."

THEATER DEPT.: Morris Carnovsky, the Group Theater actor, was rehearsing his lines for Clifford Odets' new play, "Night Music" . . . lines in which he repeats the Odets lament about the world and the hope some day to make it a better place . . . "Morris," Philip Loeb told him, "I've just decided you must be a lousy actor" . . . "And why?" Carnovsky demanded . . . "Because in every role you've ever played," said Loeb, "you always say it's going to be a better world—and it's still the same."

FASHIONS DEPT.: C. Cambridge Green, the Broadway jeweler, was angered in Lindy's a few nights ago because his tie was criticized by George Meyer, Edgar Leslie and Fred Ahlert, the song writers . . . They insisted that their ties were more expensive—and cost $8 each . . . "Fifty bucks say they didn't cost $8," Green challenged . . . "We can't bet on that," Ahlert explained, "because the haberdasher isn't in business now. We can't find his books" . . . "We'll find 'em," Green countered, "because if you guys paid $8 for those ties—then Dewey must have the books."

LOCAL NEWS: Local 802 of the Musicians Union will contribute $1,000 to the Metropolitan Opera . . . Prince Rene de Bourbon, husband of Princess Margaret of Sweden, is fighting in the Finnish army. His brother, who just arrived here—to represent Gen. Franco in Santo Domingo—reported this Thursday night . . . Doris Dudley, who is one of John Barrymore's children in 'My Dear Children,' will reside with Diana Barrymore . . . Ezra Stone, who broadcasts for "The Aldrich Family" program, will make a personal appearance tour of two weeks. Because the broadcasts describe him as blond, Ezra is dyeing his hair.

HELP WANTED: Judge Nott, who presided at the Jimmy Hines trial, before his retirement, was one of Judge Freschi's best friends, to whom Freschi always came for advice . . . Freschi is the jurist who mistakenly gave his secretarial post to Carmine de Sapio when he meant to give it to Louis di Salvio . . . Freschi received a California postcard from Nott offering additional advice: "It's a wise judge who knows his own secretary."

CRIME DEPT.: While Bill Buckner, who was convicted in the Philippine bond fraud case, is continuing his appeal to the United States Supreme Court, his codefendant, Felipe Buencamino, has requested no stay for purposes of appeal . . . Buencamino, related to President Quezon of the Philippines and head of the Nationalist Party there, is seeking executive clemency, and President Roosevelt may grant it to him.

Atlas

A diversified stage entertainment opened at the Atlas Theater yesterday afternoon.

Sully, of the team of "Sully and Thomas," acting as M. C. first introduced "Sir Cecil Allexander," a tramp comedian, who convulsed the packed house with his antics. Next came the "Stanley Twins & Co." recently featured with George White's "Scandals," who stopped the show cold with their dance routines. The Stanley Twins' "company" is Charley Malone, one of the cleverest dancers ever to appear on the Atlas stage.

"Sully and Thomas," known to Washington from many appearances in the downtown theaters, closed the show in their cyclonic fashion.

The double-feature screen bill is comprised of the Marx Bros. in "At the Circus" and Johnny Downs in "Laugh It Off." The stage program continues through tomorrow.

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Feb. 4 (INS).—The feminine fans who wrote me on tour that Richard Greene is their favorite will really go overboard when they see him in "Little Old New York." Hollywood and, until recently, Richard's own studio, had no conception of his popularity with the girls. But they know now, because of his enormous fan mail. Darryl Zanuck and Joseph Schenck have been in a huddle over what should be done with their fair-haired boy to take him out of the too-heroic class. The result of the powwows is that young Greene in all probability will be handed "The Mark of Zorro," the late Douglas Fairbanks' biggest hit.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Must confess I was one of the most surprised at the preview of "Little Old New York" at the improvement in the handsome, dimpled Greene. He makes Robert Fulton a dashing and handsome hero. Speaking of "Little Old New York," another hit is Ben Carter, the Negro comedian, who used to be an agent. In fact, he was trying to sell one of his players to Henry King when the director nabbed Ben. He accepted the job and gave the 10 per cent commission to his client.

Alexander Korda, who arrives in Hollywood in three weeks, will film Kipling's famous jungle stories right here, with Sabu, the fascinating little Indian boy, as his star. The advance guard of the Korda contingent arrived in New York Friday—Sabu, his white Arabian horse, Mr. and Mrs. Zolton Korda and their young son, David. They brought with them a print of "The Thief of Bagdad," based on Douglas Fairbanks, sr.'s, famous picture. They are coming immediately to Hollywood to lay the groundwork for the jungle stories and to have everything in readiness for Alex's arrival. This will be the first time he has made a picture in Hollywood in ten years, but since his wife, Merle Oberon, is already here and doing so well, it looks as if he will stay here. Mrs. Zoltan Korda is the former Jean Gardner, British actress.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: The John Garfields are expecting another baby. He leaves to join her in New York, where she is visiting relatives; Nat Wolfe gave a stag farewell cocktail party to his pals. He marries Edna Best, February 7; saw Herbert Marshall and Lee Russell with Anatole Litvak and Frances Robinson. Bart and Lee will march altarward very soon themselves; the Bob Taplinger-Suzanne Brewster Friendship is developing into a romance; Mrs. Fred MacMurray wore the trickiest hat at the birthday party Fred gave her at Ciro's. She and Mrs. Zeppo Marx taking lessons in turban wrapping from an exotic-looking woman in white—a stranger; Ann Dvorak with Leslie Fenton and the Ray Millands with some ten others were at the MacMurray table; the William Curleys in town overnight on their way to New York, entertaining the Arthur Lakes (Patricia Van Cleve) and Mr. and Mrs. Billie Mayer (Katherine Heyward) at the Troc. Mr. Curley is the editor of the New York Journal-American and Mrs. Curley was formerly Mary Grace.

Alan Mowbray is writing a book which will contain three World War stories; Lana Turner has moved into her new home in Sunset Hills; Bonita Granville celebrated her seventeenth birthday last Friday on the "40 Little Mothers" set. Eddie Cantor gave her a portable radio and her mother's gift was a Fox cape; Venita and Jack Oakie put out of their ranch house home by the heavy rain, looking for a place to sleep; Al Hall wrapped his camera in blankets to keep the sound of the heavy rain from the sound track.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Mrs. Bacon Entertains For Clarence Streit

Other Parties Are Given for Novelist, Indian Singer and Women Attending Democrats' National Committee Sessions

A newspaper correspondent, a distinguished novelist, a visiting Indian singer and a dozen "lady politicians" were week-end visitors around whom several interesting parties centered last evening.

Clarence Streit, author of "Union Now," whose plan for a federalized Europe is causing much comment and speculation, was honored at a buffet supper given by Mrs. Robert Low Bacon. At the same time Democratic National committeewomen were being feted at dinner by Mrs. Thomas F. McAllister. Mrs. Dorothy Canfield Fisher was being entertained by Miss Lesley Frost and Mrs. Wilson Compton was hostess at a dinner at which the guests included Healoa, a charming feminine member of the Chickasaw Indian tribe who is visiting Mrs. Compton.

Mrs. Bacon had invited 40 of her friends to her historic home on F street to meet Mr. Streit following his lecture on "Union Now" on the Town Hall program. Mrs. Streit, who accompanied her husband from New York, was also present, as were Thomas Streit, the newspaperman's brother, and his wife.

Other guests included the Spanish Ambassador and Senora de Cardenas, Mrs. Richard V. Oulahan, Town Hall director, Mr. and Mrs. Felix Morley and the Rev. Edmund Walsh.

Mrs. Fisher Gives Reading

Writers, intellectuals and members of residential society were among the group gathered by Miss Frost to meet Miss Fisher. The latter, who is a Vermont neighbor of Miss Frost's distinguished father, the poet, Robert Frost, is here to attend meetings of the National Youth Administration. She is the author of many books, including "The Bent Twig," "Basque People," "Home Fires in France" and the recent noel, "Seasoned Timber."

Invited to meet her at dinner last night were Marquis Childs, Mrs. Childs, Herbert Feis, of the State Department, and Mrs. Feis, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Lee Straus, Mr. and Mrs. Gerrett Miller and Pendleton Hogan. Later other friends dropped in at the King-Smith Studio, where the dinner was held, to hear Mrs. Fisher give a reading from her volume, "Hillsboro People," a collection of stories about Vermonters.

Mealoa, who goes only by this name, charmed fellow guests at Mrs. Compton's dinner last night. She has been singing at a Washington church and will go later in the week for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. L. Corrin Strong. The Strongs were among Mrs. Compton's guests last evening, and others included Horace Albright, former Director of the National Park Service, and Mrs. Albright, Mr. and Mrs. Seth Richardson and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Shorb.

At Mrs. McAllister's home in Alexandria, lady delegates to today's meeting of the National Democratic Committee gathered for a buffet supper.

Delegates from as far away as Oregon and the Virgin Islands were among her guests. The hostess, who is director of women's activities for the committee, wore a turquoise blue dinner gown with gold braid and beading on the sleeves. She was assisted by Mrs. May Thompson Evans, assistant director of women's activities.

First Lady To Fete Delegates

The guests included Mrs. E. W. Frost, of Arkansas; Mrs. Marguerite Thompson, of Colorado; Miss Mary Coughlin, of Connecticut; Mrs. Virginia Price, of Georgia; Mrs. George Neese Clark, of Kansas; Judge Elizabeth Menefee, of Maryland; Mrs. Elizabeth McNamara, of Massachusetts; Mrs. Lawrence McDaniel, Mrs. Charles Ryan, of Nebraska; Miss Beatrice Cobb, of North Carolina; Miss Mildred Jaster, of Ohio; Mrs. Esther Jones, of South Dakota; Mrs. George Givan, of Wisconsin; Mrs. Douglas Brown, Mrs. T. W. Taliferro, jr., of Wyoming; Mrs. Norman Mack, of the Virgin Islands, and Mrs. Katherine Ryan, of Oregon.

Mrs. McAllister will entertain at dinner again tonight for the rest of the national committeewomen here for the parley. Many of them will linger for the tea which Mrs. Roosevelt will give in their honor tomorrow afternoon at the White House.

Miss Chapin's Work Shown

A distinguished gathering, including many artists, last evening attended a private showing of sculpture by Cornelia Van A. Chapin, sister of Mrs. Francis Biddle, of Washington.

The artist, who carves directly from life, is staying with Solicitor General and Mrs. Biddle in their apartment at 2101 Connecticut avenue, to which they recently moved, and will be here until Wednesday. All three attended the opening of the show, which is being held at the Whyte Gallery, 1707 H street northwest.

Among pieces of sculpture on view are "Tortoise," "Pelican in Repose," "Elephant Study," "Penguin," "Belgian Hare," and "Guinea Pig." The materials used are ebony, volcanic rock, Greek marble, black granite and red sandstone.

Mr. and Mrs. Donald Whyte and Mr. and Mrs. James Whyte, owners of the Gallery, served refreshments. Among guests were Attorney General and Mrs. Robert H. Jackson, Mrs. Dean Acheson, Mrs. R. H. Dunlap and Mr. and Mrs. Marquis Childs.

To carve out of hard materials direct from life, without benefit of preliminary model or sketch, is a task seldom attempted by sculptors today. The intense difficulty of mastering the technique has prevented most women from attempting it.

Mrs. Roosevelt Heads Patrons of Lenten Concert

Mrs. Roosevelt heads the group of music lovers who will be patrons for the ninth annual Lenten concert of the Washington A Capella Choir directed by Ruby Smith Stahl, which will be held on Monday evening, March 11, at Constitution Hall.

Other patrons include Mrs. Hugo Black, Mrs. Albert Atwood, Canon William Bradner, Judge Fay Bentley, Mrs. Daniel Borden, Mrs. Mrs. Harold A. Brooks, Mrs. Arthur C. Christie, the Rev. John C. Cartwright, Mrs. Tracy Dows, Mrs. George W. Gillie, Mrs. Bertha Helm, Lady Lewis, Mrs. Balthasar Meyer, Mrs. F. H. Miles, Mrs. A. Chambers Oliphant, Mrs. Jacob S. Peyton, Mrs. Donald Richberg, Mrs. Frank H. Simonds, Mrs. Thomas Somerville, Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman, Mrs. Charles D. Walcott, Mrs. Charles Warren and members of the Washington Composers Club.

The origin and development of the A Capella Choir has always been closely associated with the White House, for it was during the Coolidge Administration that the President and First Lady—both of whom attended the First Congregational Church—became deeply interested in this work.

Trade Pacts Topic Of 20th Century Club

The International Outlook Section of the Twentieth Century Club will meet in the fourth floor assembly room of the Y. W. C. A., this afternoon at 2, with the chairman of the section, Mrs. James K. McClintock, presiding. "Reciprocal Trade Agreement" will be the subject to be discussed by a guest speaker, Henry L. Diemel, assistant chief of the Trade Agreements Division of the State Department.

The Civics-Education section of the club will hold a luncheon meeting at the Y. W. C. A., Thursday, at 12:30 p. m. Dr. C. S. Marsh, vice president of the American Council on Education, will be the guest speaker, discussing "Gen. Robert E. Lee as a College President." He will be introduced by Mrs. Paul Ewerhardt, chairman of the section, who will preside.

25 Debutantes to March Tonight in the Intricate Steps of the Virginia Cotillion

THE 25 DEBUTANTES who will march in the intricate steps which will highlight tonight's Virginia Cotillion at the Army and Navy Country Club will all wear gowns of white and carry arm bouquets of American Beauty roses.

Leading the figure will be Miss Mary Lee, of New York and Virginia, who will be escorted by William Byrd, jr., of Alexandria, chairman of the floor committee. Her escort to the dance is to be James Keith, of Warrenton and Fairfax.

Before the party Miss Lee will be honor guest at a dinner to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Hooff, of Alexandria. The guests will include Dr. and Mrs. Bolling Lee, of New York, parents of Miss Lee, who arrived Saturday.

A LARGE NUMBER from the hunt country will gather in Alexandria tonight for Mrs. Frank M. Dillard's buffet dinner for her house guests, Mrs. R. T. Watts, of Lynchburg, and Mrs. Watts, son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. George Austen, of Boston.

Among the guests will be Senator Arthur Capper, Mr. and Mrs. George Benoit and Mr. and Mrs. John Lee Pratt, of Fredericksburg; Mrs. Neitah King, Miss Christine Sadler, Mrs. Joseph Weller, Thomas Barringer, William Herbert, Edward Van Devanter and John Chappalear. The guests will attend the cotillion.

Miss Rosita Davis will entertain the younger set at dinner before the dance at the home of her aunt, Mrs. Julian Burke, of Alexandria.

Mrs. F. Sheild McCandlish and her daughter, Miss Nancy Montague McCandlish, will give a dinner at their home in Fairfax tonight before the cotillion. The party was planned in honor of Mrs. McCandlish's cousins, Mrs. H. Gwynne Tayloe, jr., and Mrs. Frank C. Littleton, jr., of Middleburg, who were formerly the Misses Polly and Rosalie Montague, of Charleston, S. C. As they are all ill, the honor guests will not attend.

Those present will include Mrs. McCandlish's son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Schuyler William Livingston, of Seminary Hill; Mr. and Mrs. John Helmars, Miss Lee Waters, Miss Anne Parker, Miss Mary Margaret Elliason, of Maryland; James Munro, A. B. MacChesny, William T. Lesh and W. D. Evans, of Richmond.

MISS RANDOLPH RICHARDSON and Miss Sally McCandlish, of Fairfax, will dine with Miss Eula Council, of Washington, before the cotillion. Miss Richardson entertained at her home, White House, yesterday afternoon for Miss Mary Lee.

Among the guests were Miss Madaline Drake, of Warrenton, a debutante; Miss Louisa Horton, Miss Eula Council, Miss Genevieve Marsh, Miss Jane Irving, Miss Sidney Smith, Dr. and Mrs. Bolling Lee, Mr. and Mrs. William Byrd, Dr. George Maxatee, Dr. Theodore McCord, West Cureton, James Keith, Robert McCandlish, Ellerson Smith and Dr. Sam Williams.

Service Council To Hear Mr. Bell

Howard W. Bell, of the American Youth Commission will speak Thursday evening at the Town Hall meeting sponsored by the Service Council of the Jewish Community Center at 8:30 p. m. at 1529 Sixteenth street. The topic for the evening will be "Is Youth Doing Its Share?"

Mr. Bell, who is an expert on youth problems, will attack the subject from the point of view of what adults should do for youth.

After his address, the audience will be invited to listen to the radio broadcast of the Town Hall of the Air at 9 o'clock. After the broadcast there will be an open forum led by Mr. Bell and participated in by the audience. Mrs. Rubin Borasky will conduct the program.

Miss Janet Richards Will Address Club

Miss Janet Richards will address members of the Washington Club tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock. Her subject will be "The Political Trend of World Events."

Miss Richards will be presented to club members by Mrs. Gilbert H. Grosvenor, chairman of the club's program committee, who has just returned from a stay in Florida.

Miss Daisy Prentice will have charge of the arrangements of flowers during February. Mrs. Charles M. Marsh will direct those who will serve refreshments.

Two More Become Finn Aid Ushers

Miss Dorothy Coman and Miss Barbara Bolling are recent additions to the list of ushers for the Finnish benefit concert which will be given Friday at the Mayflower by Garfield Swift, barytone; Miss Elizabeth Tyner, pianist, and the Pro-Musica Quartet. The ushers will be dressed in Finnish costumes and will have charge of a desk in the Mayflower lobby for several days before the concert for the convenience of those who have failed to obtain their tickets from Mrs. Dorothy Dorsey, ticket chairman.

Additional boxholders include Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley, Mrs. S. Wallace Dempsey, Mrs. William Fitch Kelley, Mrs. Laurence H. Green, Mrs. George Maurice Morris and Mrs. Emil Hurja.

Miss Compson Plans Party for Dinner

Miss Cornelia Cornell Compson will entertain tonight at the Founders' Day Dinner of the Professional Writers' Club, at which Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt will speak in honor of the birthday of Mlle. Louise Brabant, lyric soprano-concert and radio artist. Miss Brabant made her debut here November 14 in a joint recital with Norman Frauenheim, pianist. Mr. Frauenheim will be guest soloist tonight.

Other guests of Miss Compson will include Miss M. Fergus Proctor, Miss Mabel Oleson, Miss Shepard, Miss Therese Pierson, Leavenworth Colby and Wallace W. Wright.

Mrs. Vorys to Speak

Guest of honor at the bimonthly luncheon at headquarters of the League of Republican Women Thursday will be Mrs. John M. Vorys, wife of Representative Vorys, of Ohio. She will speak on "India."

Notables to See 'Foxes' Opening

A slight touch of the flu is expected to keep Speaker William Bankhead from attending the opening night of the Washington run of "The Little Foxes," in which his daughter, Tallulah Bankhead stars. The actress will appear here this week, beginning tonight.

The Speaker and Mrs. Bankhead have already seen the play, but hope to go again sometime later in the week.

A brilliant audience is expected to turn out for tonight's opening. Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Smith will entertain at a box party, and Miss Angelica Lloyd, daughter of Mrs. Demarest Lloyd, will have guests with her.

Others expected to be present include Col. and Mrs. G. M. Barnes, Mrs. Norman Baxter, Dr. and Mrs. George Bowerman, Mrs. Harrison Brand, jr., Raymond T. Cahill, Louis G. Caldwell, Mr. and Mrs. W. Wallace Chiswell, C. C. Concannon, Dr. and Mrs. Edgar P. Copeland, Mrs. Charles I. Corby, Mrs. John W. Also Mr. and Mrs. Mark Lansburgh, Mrs. Felix Morley, Mrs. Cresson Newbold, Mr. and Mrs. George Parsons, Dr. and Mrs. Luther Reichelderfer, Mrs. Ernest Walker and Mr. and Mrs. Metcalfe Walling.

Dorothy Cox, Mr. Redue Wed

Rear Admiral and Mrs. Ormond Lee Cox, of Hampton, Va., have announced the marriage of their daughter, Miss Dorothy Cox, to Henry Oliver Redue, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Oliver Redue, sr., of Pikesville, Md., at 11 o'clock Saturday morning in the Francis Asbury Methodist Church, Washington.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Robin Gould before an altar decorated with palms and white flowers.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a traveling suit of slate blue tweed with navy accessories. Her corsage was of gardenias and lilies of the valley.

Edward Marriott, of Baltimore, was best man.

Only relatives and intimate friends of the bride and bridegroom were present.

Mr. and Mrs. Redue, jr., left immediately after the ceremony on a motor trip to Florida. They will be at home after the first of March in Edgewater, Md.

Admiral and Mrs. Cox and their family are former residents of Washington.

Miss Lindsay to Speak At Dames Meeting

The District Society of the Dames of the Loyal Legion will meet at headquarters of the League of Republican Women, 1301 Seventeenth street northwest, at 2:30 p. m. tomorrow.

Miss Malvina Lindsay, Woman's Club editor of The Post and author of "The Gentler Sex" column, will speak. She will be introduced by Mrs. Mary Logan Tucker, the president, who will preside. Mrs. W. F. Mutchler and Miss May S. Clark will be the hostesses for the tea after the meeting.

Announces Betrothal

Lieut. Comdr. Hugo Frankenberger, U. S. N., retired, has announced the engagement of his daughter, Janice Marie, to Ensign William Gaines Blasdel, U. S. N., son of Mr. and Mrs. Girard D. Blasdel, of Swarthmore, Pa. The wedding will take place in June.

Hunts and Son Entertain In Honor of Mrs. Prichard

Kentuckian Will Be Complimented Today With Luncheon; Col. and Mrs. Jenks Plan Theater Party for Visitor Tonight

Mrs. Edward F. Prichard, of Paris, Ky., was honored yesterday at two parties when Mr. and Mrs. Risley Goldsborough Hunt entertained at a large tea at the Army and Navy Country Club, and her son, Edward F. Prichard, gave a breakfast.

The attractive visitor, who is the houseguest of Mr. and Mrs. Hunt, will be complimented today at a luncheon to be given by Mrs. Hunt at the Mayflower following Mrs. Townsend's musicale. Tonight, Col. and Mrs. Glen Jenks will be hosts at a theater party for her.

Mr. Prichard, jr., has only been here a short time—he serves as secretary to Justice Felix Frankfurter—but already he has become something of a legend. He is the inspiration for all sorts of amusing anecdotes, though still in his 'twenties.

"Hockley" Breakfasts Famous in Capital

Yesterday he entertained his mother at a breakfast at Hockley, where he lives with ten other bachelors. These parties are weekly institutions in Washington, and all sorts of people, from Supreme Court justices to debutantes, journey out to the red brick residence just across the Potomac for sausages and scrambled eggs on Sundays.

Mrs. Hunt got over an attack of influenza just in time to receive at her party yesterday. With her in the receiving line were Col. and Mrs. Jenks and Mrs. Karl Knox Gartner, of New York, a former Washington resident.

The hostess wore a frock of gray-blue with saddle pockets, and Mrs. Prichard had chosen blue lace. Mrs. Gartner's costume was a stunning model of fuschia, with which she carried a muff of mink topped by mimosa flowers. Mrs. Jenks wore "shocking pink."

Cold turkey, sliced ham, and mounds of cheese were piled up on one table in the club dining-room. Another was heaped with sandwiches and bright colored cakes.

Luncheon, Theater Party Will Honor Guest

Assisting during the afternoon were Mrs. Hobart MacCubbin, Mrs. Don Knowlton, Mrs. Minna Adams, Mrs. Ralph Hallett, Mrs. Walter Donald, Mrs. Cyril Smith and Mrs. Mary Logan Tucker, a cousin of the hostess. About 200 guests called during the afternoon.

Mrs. Hunt's luncheon for Mrs. Prichard today will be attended by Mrs. Alben Barkley, wife of the Senator from Kentucky; Mrs. Emil Hurja, Mrs. Henry Parsons Erwin, Mrs. David St. Pierre Gaillard, Mrs. Gartner, Mrs. Jenks and Mrs. Clifford Bangs.

Present at Col. and Mrs. Jenks' theater party for Mrs. Prichard tonight will be Mr. Prichard, jr., Mrs. Gartner, Mrs. Donald and Mr. and Mrs. Hunt.

William Julian Takes Vacation

William A. Julian, Treasurer of the United States, has arrived at the Miami Biltmore Hotel for a vacation.

Walter E. Edge, of Washington, former Ambassador to France, and Mrs. Edge, witnessed the racing earlier in the week. In their party were Mrs. John W. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. George Brown, jr., and Carroll Brown, all of Baltimore. Mrs. Edge topped off her smart sports costume with a wrapped turban of red, white and blue.

Mrs. Craven McHarg, jr., of Washington, was a recent member of a party on the terrace of the Hialeah Club. Others from the Capital who have been sojourning at the Florida resort include Stephen T. Early, one of President Roosevelt's secretaries, and Mr. and Mrs. Clare Peter Johnson, of Washington and Coral Gables.

Mrs. Pierce To Be Hostess

Mrs. George M. Pierce, of 1417 Belmont street northwest, will be hostess at a luncheon for Frances Scott Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, at 1 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Assisting Mrs. Pierce as hostesses will be Mrs. Harold Lambert and Mrs. Laurence Hazard. Delegates to the National Congress of the D. A. R. here the week of April 19 will be appointed at this meeting.

Mrs. George Thorpe To Speak on Safety

"Training Young People to be Safe Drivers," will be the subject of a talk to be delivered by Mrs. George Thorpe, chairman of the women's safety committee of the American Automobile Association to the Parent-Teacher Association of the Gordon Junior High School on Wednesday, at 8 p. m. Mrs. Thorpe will tell of the experiments conducted in the high schools in Cleveland teaching school children to become road conscious and will outline the AAA program.

Her talk will be accompanied by a safety film. The talk will be preceded by a parade demonstration of the Boy Patrols of the Gordon Junior High, accompanied by the school band.

Mrs. Hugh Butler, chairman of program of the association, will introduce Mrs. Thorpe.

Mrs. Nash to Close Candlelight Series

The last of the season's Candlelight Concerts will be held this afternoon at the Phillips Gallery at 5 o'clock. This series is sponsored by the Washington Chamber Music Society.

Mrs. Walter Nash will be soloist this afternoon.

Justice and Mrs. F. Dickinson Letts have issued invitations to the wedding of their niece, Miss Dorothy Haney Letts, to Ollie Roscoe McGuire, jr., at 4:30 p. m. February 24 at the Church of the Covenant.

Miss Letts will be guest of honor at a luncheon to be given February 19 by Mrs. William M. Guthrie and Mrs. F. Henry Jones. The party will take place at the Chevy Chase Club.

Mrs. Guthrie and Mrs. Jones also will entertain at luncheon at the club today for Miss Gertrude Pearson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Edmonston Pearson, whose marriage to Francis M. Durrance, jr., son of Judge and Mrs. Francis M. Durrance, will take place Saturday.

The ceremony will be performed at the Church of the Epiphany, the Rev. ZeBarney Phillips officiating. Miss Katherine E. Pearson will be maid of honor for her sister and another sister, Miss Edith Pearson, will be among the bridesmaids, who also will include the Misses Kearsley Caldwell, Martha Talley, Peggy Mary Whiteley and Martha McKenna, of Washington, and Kate Johnson, of Princeton, N. J.

Rosemary Turner, Brien McMahon Nuptials Set

Miss Rosemary Turner, daughter of Mrs. Arthur Gordon Turner, of Washington, and the late Mr. Turner, has completed plans for her wedding tomorrow to Brien McMahon, son of Mr. and Mrs. William B. McMahon, of the Wardman Park Hotel.

A reception at the Mayflower Hotel will follow the ceremony, which will take place at 11 o'clock in the morning at St. Matthew's Cathedral, the Rev. Joseph Moran officiating.

Mrs. Sylvia Brainard Kauffmann, the bride's aunt, will be matron of honor and the bridesmaids will include Miss Eileen McMahon, Mr. McMahon's sister; Miss Marce Robinson, Miss Dorothy Fleharty and Miss Mary Holmes Clark.

Dr. William H. McMahon will be best man and the ushers will be Dr. John D. McMahon, Richard J. Connor, Alfons Landa, Arthur Gordon Turner, Gordon Dean and Walter E. Gallagher.

After a wedding trip the couple will reside at the Wardman Park.

Jean Rodney, Kintner to Wed

Mr. and Mrs. Earle H. Rodney, of Premium Point, New Rochelle, N. Y., announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Jean Elaine Rodny, to Robert Edmonds Kintner of Washington.

Miss Rodney was graduated from Dana Hall, class of 1933, and attended Smith College. She was associated with the production of last year's revival of Sutton Vane's "Outward Bound" and was the coproducer this season of the swing version of "Mid-Summer Night's Dream."

Mr. Kintner was graduated from Swarthmore College, class of 1931. He was formerly employed in the Washington bureau of the New York Herald Tribune and is now coauthor of the "Capital Parade."

Notes of Society

Garden Flowers Make Debut for Dress Accent

Stiff-Stemmed Blooms Like Jonquils Or Tulips Are Adapted for Wear By Clipping Off and Impaling on Wires

YOU'RE going to be wearing new flower tricks in your Valentine and Easter corsages this year.

Since the fashion world is using blooms in both prints and accents in the 1940 spring mode, new ideas in fresh flower corsages have come to town, too, reports the Associated Press.

They're as colorful as a garden; in fact, some of them have been lifted from garden borders and paths. Irene Hayes, New York expert, who has flowered some of Park avenue's smartest weddings and many a famous debutante's ball, has taken jonquils, tulips, iris and the like—once considered too stiff-stemmed for a corsage—and made of them some of the most intriguing arrangements you ever saw.

Sometimes the heads are removed from the thick stems and speared on wires which are then wrapped in florists' green film tape, and clustered together with bows made of the long, thin leaves.

on wires which are then wrapped in florists' green film tape, and clustered together with bows made of the long thin leaves.

For your gray spring suit, a cluster of red tulips tied with their own green leaf bows.

To accent your new black faille cocktail suit, white or yellow iris, wired and handled like orchids, then perched either on your lapel or on your handbag.

To go dancing nights with your chartreuse chiffon, a spray of pansies or Talisman roses tucked in your hair.

To wear with your classic black dinner gown a ribbon wristlet topped with two gardenias. (Flowers on the head or wrist are a newer evening accent than corsages.)

As something different m Valentines, a wire heart wrapped in green ribbon, and centered with three wire prongs on which you may spear any blooms you fancy.

Smart Effects

If you want to get the smartest effects with your flowers, wear the light pastel ones on sober or pastel costumes, says Benny Hubbard, a slim young man with artist's hands and "fighting Irish" eyes, who arranges a number of the new corsages in Miss Hayes' shop. But don't set pastel flowers against an intense color, he warns. For instance, you can wear mauve-toned orchids on pale blue or dark navy, but not on a vivid royal blue.

You can use the reverse of this idea, too, he says, by setting flowers of an intense color against a rock of paler tone, such as deep red roses worn against a shell pink frock.

Flowers of deep rich color, such as maroon carnations, violets or dark purple pansies, he suggests, generally look best when worn with subdued or dark colors such as gray, brown, navy, black or dark green.

Bright posies worn at the throat, and a froth of snowy eyelet embroidery give spring atmosphere to this black crepe indispensable. The shoulder shirring softens the snug bodice and is in keeping with the flaring skirt, which the designer features throughout his spring collection.

Designers Expect Heavy Demand for Beach Costumes

Paris (U.P.)—French dressmakers, in the midst of their spring and summer style shows, reported they were expecting a big success for unusual beach costumes despite the war.

One outfit, designed by Alix, with the Florida trade in mind, had bright-hued and transparent oil silk bloomers to be worn over a white jersey bathing suit.

Oiled silk skirts also were introduced in this collection, which included one in red tied on with a green belt. A popular white swimming suit has a shoulder-blade bolero which buttons on top of the garment to make a beach ensemble for a stroll.

Impetus to sales was believed to have been provided during this week's showings by the Duchess of Windsor, who took time out from her war work to look at the 1940 creations. She went the rounds of the openings and took many notes on the spring and summer collections.

Your Figure, Sir!

'Breakdowns' After 40, Increasing; Due To Soft Living

JUST RECENTLY a famous hotel man died at the age of 48, a newspaper executive at 46, and an international banker at 45. These men died at the age when life is supposed to begin.

What about it? Statistics tell us that man is living longer. But Jesse Feiring Williams, M. D., head of the department of health and physical education at Teachers College, Columbia University, puts it this way:

"The statistical man is living longer, but the human being is not. The saving of infant mortality is responsible for a decline in the general death rate. But the death rate after 40 is going up."

The increase in mortality between the ages of 40 and 50, Dr. William says, is to be attributed to three conceivable causes. A high percentage of the infants saved by science are not biologically sound and may be expected to die early. The second explanation is that early deaths are due to the pressure of modern civilized life—"which is tremendously varied and complex."

Walk at least 20 blocks daily to keep in trim

Organs Break Down

The third cause of these early deaths is the breakdown of vital organs, resulting from failure to develop them during the nascent period of childhood. It is the conviction of this noted educator that childhood training veers too much toward the mental and not enough toward the physical.

There are, of course, a certain percentage of deaths that are accidents, such as infections like pneumonia and streptococcus. But severe infection has nothing to do with age.

There is nothing sudden about the "sudden breakdown" of the busines man. The breakdown is in the making for a long time through bad living habits. A man lets himself get into poor condition. He gets no exercise, his tissues become soft, he overeats and takes on weight—excess weight places a strain on the vital organs.

Among the first warning signals of poor physical condition are: the inability to sleep soundly, a feeling of not being well rested on waking in the morning, and headaches that cannot be laid to eye troubles.

Energy Lessened

"The warning signals are not actually definable," Dr. Williams explains, "but there is a general feeling of lessened energy which means that the body tissues and cells are not functioning properly."

Before you reach that stage, you should put yourself in the hands of a physician who understands the whole man. You need a physical check-up, but probably more than that you need a check-up on your living habits.

It is internal tension that causes strain and raises the blood pressure. If you could train yourself to do things quickly and yet remain calm inside, the internal strain would be alleviated. When you drive your car at 50 miles per hour there is no necessity for racing your mind at the same speed!

Dr. Williams believes that all men know what they should do, but they don't do anything about their living habits because they have other goals. And your immediate response will be—"But a man has to make a living!" But the only reason you earn a living is to enjoy living. The doctor says: "The business man confuses ends and means. He gets tied up into a job and forgets that the reason for doing his job is to get more out of life."

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

New York, February 4.—Opera here has finally lived up to the tradition of that art, with artists trading emotional punches, and the customers thoroughly enjoying the shindy. For several days the old birdhouse at Fifty-ninth street and Broadway was the most colorful news source in town.

Alice Hughes

A row was reported in the Wagnerian section, undoubtedly the greatest in the world. The huge Danish tenor, Melchior, and the placid Flagstad, top soprano of them all in dramatic roles, were said to be beefing about the labors of Mr. Erich Leinsdorf, only 27 years old, who took over the heavy job of conducting the Wagnerian repertoire when the great Arthur Bodansky died just before the current season opened. Brother Melchior is reported to have said that Leinsdorf was undoubtedly talented, but a trifle young and inexperienced for such a heavy chore. Then the expensive fur began to fly all over the newspapers.

I made it a special point to attend the first German opera after the ruckus started, although music drama is not exactly my dish. But I did want to see if the great Dane accidentally dropped a heavy property on Leinsdorf's devoted skull. The piece was "Goetterdaemmerung." Leinsdorf got a wave of applause and a few hisses, and when Melchior turned up in the little skirt of Siegfried he got about the same welcome. Honors wer easy. But to think I should live to hear the day that hisses defiled the edifice sacred to the memory of Caruso! That was all that happened, and I took my Wagner like a gamester, I hope.

Edward Johnson, the former tenor who now runs the Met, has about the most horrible job in town at present, since th place is stony broke. A campaign is on for no less than $1,000,000 to buy the place from the company which owns it, and to keep it going as well. The multimillionaires who used to keep it up just don't now, or have lost their rubles—so it is up to the gallery gods.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Well, the story's here, at an incredibly early date. Neighbor Fred Slater, who runs an unofficial bird sanctuary for his own pleasure, reports that no less than 400 robins visited him over the week-end, flown up from the South. Humph! If I were the South, I'd sue for slander . . . Even so, you have no notion what a belt some of us damnyankees got out of the newsreel clips showing Peachtree street, Atlanta, well buried under snow.

Now that Helen Hayes' life story by her mother, Mrs. Brown, is in the book stores, no doubt thousands will dash to buy it, though I feel that the manner of telling it is somewhat awkward and unfortunate. But it is fascinating story of a girl who loves the theater wholeheartedly, and so brightly adorns us. We are a lucky lot, having two superb actresses at the height of their powers at the same time—meaning, of course, Helen and Kit Cornell.

News of the Day

"Any news?"

"Not a thing."

"It seems as if there's nothing in the papers any more."

"Well, the whole thing is that they print too much crime and scandal."

"That's right. People want more constructive news . . . Do you see anything about the Ribaldton divorce trial? It said yesterday they were going to get to his letters today."

"I haven't found it yet—say, listen to this, 'WOMAN'S TORSO FOUND IN ARTIST'S TRUNK.'"

"Well, women usually bring those things on themselves. Who was she?"

"I don't know . . . wait a minute . . . 'BLONDE MODEL MISSING' . . . It says the trunk was under a pile of etchings . . ."

"Isn't that horrible! I hate to read about such things. Are you through with that piece of the paper?"

"In just a minute . . . Say, it says here that Llewelyn Mugmore says he may marry 14 wives before he's through!"

"Isn't that disgusting! The papers oughtn't to give him all that publicity. Does it say anything about that Clarice Brasser he was married to?"

"I don't know. Wait, I want to see what it says here about Hitler having a new girl friend."

"Well, all I can say is they're mighty hard up for news to print that! Who is she?"

"Oh, some night club singer——"

"Say, wait! Who's that woman's picture there on the back?"

"Where? . . . Oh, Belinda Bovine! . . It says she's getting a divorce from Hathaway Hilt."

"They ought to quit publishing those Hollywood divorces—say, what does that headline say?"

"Let me see—'CHARGES ORGIES IN LOVE CULT.'"

"You don't mean they put that in the paper!"

"Yes, indeed."

"How disgraceful! Let me see it."

"Wait! Wait! Let me keep this piece! I haven't read Gabby Gosling's column."

"That column oughtn't to be permitted to go through the mails."

"Well, nobody reads it but servants for backstairs' gossip. Well, of all things!"

"What?"

"The Ted Trotters are expecting the stork!"

"No! Why they've only been married—wait, let's see . . ."

"I think it's perfectly outrageous to print personal things like that. Oh, and it says here that Jane Stepp's going to Reno."

"No! If I were Jane I'd sue them. Does it say who she's going to marry?"

"No, but it says another of the Bigwigger boys is going to be divorced."

"No! Which one?"

"Horace."

They oughtn't to embarrass the Bigwiggers by printing such things. Who's the woman?"

"It doesn't say."

"Gabby's slipping a little, don't you think?"

"Yes, she never has anything any more . . . Now, where on earth could that Rabaldton divorce trial be?—Oh, say, listen to this! 'MAN OF 92 IN LOVE TRIANGLE.'"

"The old fool! Honestly, the silly things they put in the paper! What did he do?"

"Oh, he won the 14-year-old wife away from his 70-year-old son——"

"Let's see it!"

"Wait—I want to see what it says here about Myrt Dasher's alimony, 'SETTLES FOR $3,000,000!'"

"I thought she'd hold out for more. Say, what is that there, where it says, 'KEYHOLE TESTIMONY?'"

"Oh, that's that Dizzard alienation case."

"Isn't it disgusting to have to read about things like that when there's so many worthwhile things they could write about?"

"Yes, when you think of all the really exciting things that are being done in art and music and science and—Oh, say here's that Ribaldton divorce trial!"

"Wait, there's a picture! Let me see it!"

"In a minute . . . wait, who is it? . . . Oh, Toots Turner!"

"That's one of the girls his wife named——"

"I know—Oh, here are the letters! Now, let's see . . . Honestly, I wish you'd listen to this, 'Darling Cutikins.'"

"Of all things! To print that right in the paper! For everybody to read! What else does it say?"

"Wait—they're all in agate. I'll have to get my reading glasses——"

Early Treatment for Pneumonia Effective; Symptoms, Listed

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

PNEUMONIA is under very good control today. This is due to the researches of the past few years. Two methods of treatment have been proved to be effective in pneumonia. One is the use of vaccines for the different strains; the other is the use of a drug, sulfapyridine. There is no reason why both methods of treatment cannot be carried out.

Pneumonia is caused by a germ, the pneumococcus, which has many varieties. The proper serum must be selected to fit the exact variety which the patient has. This is now done rapidly by methods of typing known in all laboratories. Type III pneumococcus is resistant to any serum, but yields to salfapyridine.

All these procedures can be left in the hands of the attending physician.

Know Early Signs

What is important for the patient to know is that during this kind of weather, a sudden pain in the side, with or without a chill, with a feeling of great prostration and oppression in the chest, accompanied by fever, probably marks the onset of pneumonia. At least, the symptoms call for a consultation with your family doctor. Since early treatment leads to the best results, and since the doctor has effective early treatment, everyone should stay on the conservative side and call for medical consultation when even a suspicion exists.

Influenza, the other great dangerous respiratory disease, is, like the common cold, probably a virus disease. The virus has been cultivated by ferrets.

Influenza tends to visit the world in cycles of about 20 or 30 years apart, with a severe world-wide epidemic. Whether the mild epidemics of generalized infections called "influenza" in the intervening years are really influenza is doubtful.

Hope for Vaccine

If it is proved that the ferret virus is really the cause of influenza we will have a way of checking up on clinical opinion. We may also hope that a vaccine which will be useful in prevention and treatment of influenza will be perfected before the next great world-wide epidemic appears.

The best article I have seen on the subject of influenza in recent years is in a Chinese medical journal. They appear to have the real thing there yet, which is significant because influenza usually comes out of the East. It may be that the whole world will pay for the ambitions of Japan in disrupting the population of China and the hygiene control that the new China was beginning to exercise upon its people.

Pancakes Customary for Shrove Tuesday

TOMORROW is Shrove Tuesday. In early times this day had special celebrations and it was natural since Lent began on the following day that the celebrants should indulge in food before the beginning of a fast season. There has, no doubt, been a decrease in the flipping and flopping of pancakes on this day, yet there are some who hold to the delightful custom of eating delicate pancakes on Shreve Tuesday. Even if the reason for the custom has slipped into the dim past, it is an interesting note to carry it out in our modern day.

In an English household book of 1880 the ingredients for rich pancakes call for 12 beaten eggs, 6 tablespoons flour, ½ pound of butter (melted) then nearly cooled; ½ pound powdered sugar, a grate of nutmeg, a quart of cream and a wine glass of ratafia. Beat well, bake on a hot griddle and sprinkle with sugar when served. Ratafia is a liquer with a bitter almond flavor.

There is also a Fastnacht—fried cake—similar to a doughnut that is served for a pre-Lenten feast. The recipe follows for making these "fast night" cakes.

Fasnachts

Scald and cool 1 cup milk; when lukewarm add ¼ cake yeast dissolved in ¼ cup lukewarm water, 1 teaspoon salt and enough flour to make a stiff batter. Four and one-half cups of flour in all should be used. Let rise over night. In the morning add 1-3 cup melted shortening, 2 well beaten eggs, 1 cup light brown sugar and enough more flour to make a stiff dough, and 1 teaspoon nutmeg. Let rise again and if too soft to handle add more flour. Cut into strips, roll under hands until in long, thin strips and tie. Place on a floured board, let rise 1 hour, turn and let rise again. Fry in deep fat, 365 degrees and drain on brown paper. Cool and roll in granulated sugar.

If you are interested in following the custom of eating delicate pancakes on Shrove Tuesday the following tested recipe will make delicious little "crepes."

Shrove Tuesday Pancakes

Beat 1 egg, add 1 cup milk and 1 teaspoon sugar and sift in ½ cup flour. The batter should be very thin. Pour into a small frying pan and fry in butter until done. Spread with jelly of butter and powdered sugar and roll. A teaspoon of brandy or cognac may be added to the batter if desired.

Unwrap Lamp Shades

Don't leave the cellophane wrapping on any of your lamp shades. It contracts and warps the frame beyond all hope. Instead, to protect the shades use regularly the appropriate vacuum cleaner attachment or your hand model.

New Low Price on Fresh Milk

A reduction in the price of high-quality Milk will be welcome news to Washington consumers. However, the responsibility of maintaining fair prices to the dairy farmer has also been recognized. An order just issued by the Secretary of Agriculture assures fair prices to the farmers who supply Milk for this community. The sanitary and health requirements are high. They must be kept so. We are assured the farmers supplying Milk through our Stores are in position to supply high-quality Milk.

We have long been interested in providing Milk through our markets at a price which would enable our customers to benefit from our economical method of distribution. A lower retail price is now possibe, without lowering the producers' income. We hope that this retail price reduction will make a large quantity of this necessary food available to many of our customers, and thus increase consumption. We are glad to announce that beginning today

Chicago, North Western Ex-President Succumbs To Long Illness

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Feb. 4.—Fred W. Sargent, 63, former head of the Chicago and North Western Railroad, died early today in Evanston Hospital after a long illness.

Sargent had resigned because of ill health, last May 24, from the Presidency of the railroad, a position he had held for almost 14 years. He had been in the hospital since January 6.

A native of Akron, Iowa, and a graduate of the University of Iowa, Sargent was appointed solicitor general of the North Western in 1920. He became vice president and general counsel in 1923 and assumed the presidency in 1925.

He is survived by his widow; two sons, Minier and Haskell; a daughter, Mrs. Fredrica French, all of Evanston; and three sisters, Mrs. P. F. Gault, of Evanston; Mrs. J. H. Julian, of Vermillion, S. D.; and Mrs. J. W. Bryant, of Mitchell, S. D.

Census-Taking Jobs to Pay Only $50 for 3 Weeks' Work

Each Enumerator to Be Expected to Handle 1,200 Names at Probable Rate Of 4 Cents Each; No Pay for Training

By Alfred Friendly.

The eagerly-sought job of census-taker, considered a traditonal political plum, will pay individual enumerators in the District less than $50 for almost three weeks of work, it was learned yesterday.

Census officials say the pay scale for the District has not yet been set but they believe it will be close to the National minimum of 4 cents a name. Each enumerator is expected to secure the required data on an average of 1,200 individuals.

Although the law requires that the enumeration be completed within two weeks, many applicants believe the census jobs are of much longer duration, officials say. Actually, they explain, the great majority of enumerators will work about two weeks on the piece-work wage, but also will be required to spend two or three additional days beforehand studying their duties and being examined on them. They will not be paid for the training period.

Between 450 and 500 enumerators will be hired here, it was estimated. Applications already are being received by the area supervisor for the District, Garnett R. Brown, a career Census Bureau official detailed to head the work here.

His office is in the old census warehouse at First and M streets northeast.

The rate per name, it was explained, is set according to density of population, rising as the density falls. Washington's rate, therefore, will be close to the minimum, because the population of the city is concentrated in a relatively small area. In sparsely populated rural areas in the West, census officials said, the rate sometimes rises to several dollars per name.

Bureau officials emphasized that the sole responsibility for choosing enumerators from among the applicants rests on Brown, who is required by law to select competent persons. He and the bureau have been subjected to an "astonishingly" small amount of pressure from Capitol Hill to hire individual applicants, it was said.

Final choice of the local enumerators will be made between March 15 and 20, Brown indicated. After a few days of training, they will begin their actual count on April 2.

Some 29 enumerators have been working on the census of business and manufactures for the past month.

H. Elliot Kaplan, executive secretary of the National Civil Service Reform League and well-known in personnel circles here, turns a bright red these days when he hears someone mention the Immigration and Naturalization services. That excellent establishment, it seems, has just administered him a sound boxing of the ears.

The trouble started in a question and answer column Kaplan conducts for a New York City civil service weekly. A young man seeking a Federal job wrote him to ask how he could prove his American citizenship. His father, the correspondent said, had been naturalized, but, relations having become strained, he refused to cooperate with the son by making the naturalization papers available.

In his column, Kaplan advised the young man to obtain photostatic copies of the naturalization papers.

In a couple of days he received a six-page letter from the Immigration and Naturalization Service telling him he had rendered both himself and his questioner liable to a fine of $5,000 and five years in the Federal cooler. It seems that naturalization papers, like United States currency, may not be photographed.

Kaplan made amends by publishing the service's letter, heading off the job-seeker from his prospective felony and promising to be good in the future.

One brain-wave of former Attorney General Murphy never will ripen to fruition under his successor, Robert H. Jackson. It was a plan for conducted tours through the Department of Justice, a la the present FBI chamber of horrors side-show.

The idea was to show tourists the whole department, not just J. Edgar Hoover's special domain. The gaping visitors were to be led past the murals, shown the handsome chambers of the officials and given a furtive peek at the rare spectacle of young barristers working at their desks on the Nation's judicial business.

Murphy, it is reported, thought the idea was fine. It was then broached to the Solicitor General After he cooled down enough to speak coherently, Jackson warned that if any tourists were led within two corridors of his office he would personally hurl inkwells at them.

Pastors Assail Tie To Vatican

Sending Envoy Seen As Compromising to Principle of Separate Church and State

President Roosevelt's appointment of Myron C. Taylor as his representative at the Vatican was scored from many pulpits yesterday, as Baptists throughout the Nation discussed religious liberty in sermons.

"To stand fast for liberty today means that we must stand squarely for the principle of separation of church and State," the Rev. William A. La Rue told his Takoma Park Baptist congregation, then advised that the Baptist protest was based on opposition to "any violation or compromise of that principle."

Mr. La Rue emphasized that the Baptists meant no disrespect to the President or to the Vatican, but insisted that the appointment is a concession to the Pope's claim of a temporal power.

Fears for Liberties

"We see in this appointment of Myron C. Taylor as ambassador extraordinary to the Vatican an assault upon the principle of religious liberty," he said.

Dr. Gove G. Johnson, pastor of National Baptist Memorial Church, and member of the Associated Committees on Public Relations of the Northern and Southern Baptist Conventions, visioned Protestantism as "in danger of losing through diplomacy what we gained through a long and hard struggle for religious liberty."

Quoting a statement of Dr. George Truett, former president of the Baptist World Alliance, he said:

"'The Pope of Rome has no better title to receive recognition from the President of the United States than the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, or the presiding bishop of the Methodist Church in this country.'"

Statement Quoted

Several pastors referred to the Baptist pronouncement on religious freedom which several weeks ago was broadcast by Dr. Rufus W. Weaver, executive secretary of the District Baptist Convention and chairman of the executive committee of the Associated Committees on Public Relations of the Northern and Southern Baptist Conventions.

The statement contended, in part, that ". . . the Government has extended special favors to one ecclesiastical body, to the injury of all other religious groups . . ."

Dr. William S. Abernethy, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, and president of the Washington Ministerial Union, who also criticized the Vatican appointment in his sermon yesterday, and Dr. Weaver were among a group of religious leaders who recently called upon President Roosevelt to protest against his Vatican appointment.

Shortly after that meeting, Dr. Weaver expressed the opinion that the President had left the impression that the appointment was just a temporary expedient. "Though we are encouraged by that assurance," said Dr. Weaver at that time, "we view with concern the possibility of the establishment of permanent diplomatic relations with the Vatican City."

The association will also hear a representative of the Capital Transit Co. discuss transportation difficulties of the American University section.

Federal Union Backer Argues Against Morley, Father Walsh

Streit Answers Objections That Banding 15 Democracies Would Exclude Too Many Nations and Might Breed Civil War

Clarence Streit, advocate of a "federal union of the 15 oldest democracies," defended the practical possibilities of his plan last night against the criticisms of the Rev. Edmund J. Walsh, S. J., vice president of Georgetown University, and Felix Morley, editor of The Washington Post.

The discussion took place before 400 persons in the Shoreham Hotel, as the ninety-seventh meeting of the Town Hall of Washington.

Streit outlined his plan by analogy with the early history of the United States. The Articles of Confederation which followed the Revolution failed to bring peace, prosperity and freedom because they formed a government of, by and for the States, he said.

Stress on Individual

The Federal Constitution which followed them secured these blessings because it was based upon the individual citizen, he pointed out. He compared the Articles of the Confederation to the modern League of Nations.

Peace, security and freedom can similarly be secured for the world as a whole by uniting all peoples under a democratic government whose foundation would be the individual, but in which member nations should retain the same rights as against the central government as the American States retain as against the Federal Government, Streit declared.

Father Walsh criticized Streit for naming as the founder nations in the proposed union, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Ireland, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, the Union of South Africa, and the United States.

What About Latin America?

Father Walsh pointed out that according to the tradition of American foreign policy the Latin-American republics should be included in the union from the beginning. He also suggested that the exclusion of Asiatic and Central European nations looked like "race prejudice."

Streit denied the charge of race prejudice, replying that he had chosen the countries named because they had the greatest experience of democratic government.

Father Walsh answered, "Where does experience, revelation or reason tell us that democracy is the only possible form of good government? We must not exclude people from our union because they prefer a different form of government from ours."

Morley's Criticism

Morley criticized Streit's plan on five points. He said:

How will the new union be preserved from civil wars?

Some of the advantages of union have been obtained without union, including a common currency while the gold standard prevailed; a sense of world citizenship through improved communications; and an international postal union.

Will not the strain of war force Europe's "democracies" to assume dictatorial methods?

Will not the union of democracies be attacked by a rival union of autocracies?

The parallel between the League of Nations and the Articles of Confederation does not hold because the confederation included all 13 States, while the United States refused to join the League.

Streit's Reply

To this Streit answered that the chances of civil war were negligible and worth risking; the advantages gained under Morley's second point are insufficient; France and England are sacrificing democracy for national defenses, not by conviction, and will return to it; weakness, not strength, of democracies invites attack; and the failure of the Articles of the Confederation despite the cooperation of all 13 states shows that the League could not have succeeded even if the United States had joined.

3 in D. C. Area Injured by Falls On Icy Streets

Enough ice remained on the roads yesterday to cause injury to three persons by falls. All were treated at Emergency Hospital. Betty Dawson, 26, of Alexandria, Va., received contusions of the back in a fall near her home; Israel Cheeks, 46, of 1315 Twenty-second street northwest, suffered possible fracture of the left ankle when he fell at North Capitol and H streets, and Albert Yowell, 29, of 499 G street southwest, sprained his ankle when he slipped getting out of his car in the 600 block of Seventh street southwest.

The Harbor Police warned that the Potomac River is clogged with ice cakes and not yet safe for boats.

Churches Honor Youth Leaders

Christian Endeavor Sunday Celebrates 59th Anniversary of Order's Founding

Washington's church leaders of tomorrow got the spotlight yesterday as scores of congregations celebrated Christian Endeavor Sunday.

Commemorating the fifty-ninth anniversary of the founding of the World Endeavor movement, the occasion sent hundreds of youths into official jobs for the day.

At Potomac Heights Community Church, as in many other churches, youths served as ushers, constituted the choir, spoke from the pulpit, offered devotions and performed other services.

Miss Jane Morse, president of the congregation's Endeavor unit, said the Endeavor movement was the "backbone" of the church because of its development of youth for positions of responsibility. Even conditions in war-torn lands have not been able to quench the spirit of the movement, she said.

Other Churches Celebrate

Also participating were W. I. Jenkins, Nancy Ould, Harry Diehm, Bob Philo, Dorothy Cunyus, June Sorenson, Margaret Drifmeyer, Mrs. Albert Gingrich and the Rev. Mr. Gingrich, pastor, the latter giving a sermonette on "Youth and the Untravelled World."

On the other side of the city, at Ninth Street Christian Church, the occasion was celebrated last night with Miss Alice Harvey presiding. Robert Middleton gave a prayer, Patricia Comingore recited the Christian Endeavor pledge and Albert Knechtel read the scripture. A symposium, "Christ Calls," was presented by Anna Mae Cecil, Leroy Evans, Melba Cornett, Mildred Crump and Dr. Clifford H. Jope, pastor.

At National City Christian Church, "Youth Day"—not a Christian Endeavor celebration—was marked, with young people assuming charge of the morning service. They officiated at the Lord's Supper, ushered, offered prayers and acted in other capacities.

District Banquet Tonight

The local celebration of the anniversary of Christian Endeavor will be climaxed with a banquet at 6:30 p. m. tonight at the Burlington Hotel, sponsored by the District of Columbia Christian Endeavor Union.

Arch J. McQuillan, Philadelphia endeavor leader, will speak and Miss Pauline Shoemaker, District Union president, will present memberships in the international society to outstanding local workers. Those memberships were donated by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt. Memberships given by Chief Justice Charles E. Hughes are being presented to high-school age endeavorers at Calvary Baptist Church.

Founded in 1881 at a church in Portland, Me., by the late Dr. Francis E. Clarke, its pastor, the endeavor movement has 40,000,000 members in 87 denominations and 80,000 societies in almost every land in the world. The local union last year led the international convention parade at Cleveland by virtue of exceeding its delegation quota.

Capital News In Brief

Benefit for Sharecroppers

Washington is going to have an observance of National Sharecroppers' Week.

Kate Hubbell, secretary of a local sponsoring committee, announced a campaign during the week of March 4 for the benefit of the Southern Tenant Farmers Union. A mass meeting March 8, a series of teas and a dinner will highlight the week.

Bucket Brigade Wins

Traffic was tied up on busy Fourteenth street, between F street and Pennsylvania avenue, for 15 minutes early last night as fire apparatus raced to a reported fire in the National Press Building.

Actually the flames were in an awning at the eleventh floor office of the National Distillers Product Corporation. They were extinguished by a building attendant with a bucket of water. A cigarette thrown from a higher floor caused the fire, police said.

Neat Thief Wins

A painstaking thief early yesterday stole several suits from a show window of the Bond Clothing Co., 1335 F street northwest, after smashing a small hole in the glass with a brick.

The thief took the clothing apparently by reaching through the hole, barely large enough for his hand and carefully folding the suits to pull them out.

Congress to Get Migrant Problem

Congress soon will give attention to the West Coast migrant problem, Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, said tonight upon his return from California, where he has helped conduct hearings of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee.

Asserting that treatment of the California migrant was one of the major issues considered by the committee, Thomas said the committee report "will place this problem before Congress, where it belongs."

D. C. Churches To Usher Lent In Wednesday

Federation Arranges Series of Union Rites at Epiphany

Ash Wednesday services here the day after tomorrow will usher in one of Christianity's most sacred seasons—Lent. Many pre-Lenten rites were held here yesterday.

Heralding the coming of Easter March 24, Ash Wednesday will be celebrated with both individual and union services.

The Washington Federation of Churches will sponsor services each Wednesday at 4:45 p. m. at the Episcopal Church of the Epiphany, 1317 G street northwest. The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, will address the opening rites Ash Wednesday.

The Southeast Inter-Church Council, comprising nine churches, will hold noonday services daily except Saturday during Lent at the Penn Theater, 650 Pennsylvania avenue southeast, with one church in charge of the services a week at a time.

Conducting the programs the opening week will be the Metropolitan Presbyterian Church, under the leadership of Dr. J. Lowrey Fendrich. This week's speakers will be Dr. Bernard K. Braskamp, Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Wednesday; Dr. Paul Schearrer, Takoma Park Presbyterian Church, Thursday, and Dr. Edward H. Pruden, First Baptist, Friday.

Beginning with services Thursday at 8 p. m. at Wesley Methodist Church, Protestant congregations of Chevy Chase will hold weekly union services during Lent.

The Washington Cathedral's Ash Wednesday services are slated for 7:30 and 11 a. m. and 4 p. m., with the Very Rev. Noble C. Powell, dean of the Cathedral, preaching at 11 a. m.

Suffering of Poles In Rumania Told

Widespread suffering among Polish refugees in Rumania, is described by Father Justin Figas, Buffalo, N. Y., priest, in a report made public here yesterday in behalf of the Washington Committee of the Commission for Polish Relief.

"About 95 per cent of the refugees possess nothing beyond the clothes on their backs," Father Figas said. He described a camp where 475 boys are without shoes, proper nourishment or medical care. Mrs. Frank H. Simonds, vice chairman of the committee, has appealed for donations, "large or small."

C. of C. to Hear Chest Figures, Drama Tonight

Facts on Failure Of City to Meet Quota to Be Given

Reverberations of Washington's repeated failure to meet its quota and a statement on how the Community Chest stands in 1940 will be heard tonight at 8 o'clock at the annual Chest meeting at the United States Chamber of Commerce.

The figures of the Chest's 1940 status will be expressed in terms of givers and their gifts, of 67 agencies and their services and of the efforts of 10,000 volunteer workers, officials announced.

Elected to represent contributors will be 134 trustees, this being the number required to balance the representation of agencies.

Coleman Jennings, Chest president, will greet members. Herbert L. Willett, jr., Chest director, will make the annual report. Chauncey G. Parker, jr., campaign chairman, will review the work of volunteers. John A. Reilly, treasurer, will report on Chest finances.

Failure of past campaigns will be dramatized in "Clouds Over Washington," a playlet to be presented by a cast of Civic Theater players.

A committee of 15 Community Chest League leaders, headed by Mrs. Stanley F. Reed, league president, will be hostesses at a reception for new trustees.

Welfare Quiz Waits Return Of First Lady

D'Alesandro Says She May Confer With Committee At White House

Arrangements for a White House conference between Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and members of the House District public health subcommittee and District and Federal officials on conditions at local welfare agencies probably will be made today or tomorrow, Representative Thomas D'Alesandro, jr., subcommittee chairman, said last night.

D'Alesandro said plans for the session awaited Mrs. Roosevelt's return from Hyde Park.

Her suggestion that the White House conference be held followed an invitation from the subcommittee to appear before it and relate what she found on suprise visits last week to three institutions here.

The institutions she visited were the Home for Aged and Infirm at Blue Plains, the Receiving Home for Children and the Industrial Home school. She found conditions "shocking" and "pitiful" and offered suggestions for their betterment.

In addition to members of the sub-committee, those expected to attend the conference include District Commissioners Melvin C. Hazen, George E. Allen and Col. David McCoach, jr.; Budget Director Harold D. Smith and Robert E. Bondy, director of public welfare for the District.

Commissioners Hazen and McCoach and Bondy have indicated they would make a tour of institutions in question tomorrow. D'Alesandro visited them Friday and Representative Tenerowicz (Democrat), of Michigan, a physician and subcommittee member, said he expected to make a tour tomorrow. Representative Vreeland (Republican), of New Jersey, also said he expected to visit the institutions.

Other members of the subcommittee are Representatives Bates (Democrat), Kentucky; Schulte (Democrat), Illinois; Shafer (Republican), Michigan, and Sandager (Republican), Rhode Island.

Ben Hogan Rallies to Finish 2d With 206; Heafner, Dodson Tie For 3d; Runyan Out

By the United Press

Phoenix, Ariz., Feb. 4.—Ed Oliver, of Hornell, N. Y., set a new competitive course record of 64 today to win the $3,000 Phoenix open golf tournament with a score of 205 for 54 holes of play.

Oliver, a virtual unknown until he won the Bing Crosby tournament at Del Mar last week-end, toured the par 71 Phoenix Country Club course with 18-hole scores of 69—72—64 to win first money of $700.

His 64 for the third swing over the layout was one under the 65 established by last year's winner, Byron Nelson, whose 215 failed to land him in the money.

Close on Oliver's heels was Ben Hogan, of White Plains, N. Y., who carded a 206. Hogan was almost considered out of the running yesterday when he turned in a par 71 for the first 18 holes, six strokes behind yesterday's leader, Paul Runyan. But Hogan was plenty hot today, touring the second 18 in 66—five under par—and carding a 69 for the third trip. He won $450 as second place money.

Appears Winner

Hogan, one of the last to finish, was regarded as the winner when he turned in his 206, but the word soon got around that young Oliver was blazing over the last nine 7 under par. Most of the spectators, already homeward bound, quickly gathered behind Oliver.

It was a tough defeat for Hogan because a win would have meant his first major triumph in more than five years of professional golfing.

Clayton Heafner, the former candy maker from Linville, N. C., and Leonard Dodson, young Kansas City pro, tied for third with 207's. Heafner got off to a shaky start yesterday by carding a 74, but he more than compensated today by shooting a 66 and 67. They were to play off the tie for third place money of $350.

Runyan Drops Back

One stroke behind, with 208's, came Lloyd Mangrum, of Chicago, and John Parelli, of Lake Tahoe, Calif. They were followed by Vic Ghezzi, Deal, N. J., and Sam Byrd, former New York Yankees outfielder, with 209's.

Paul Runyan, the little sharpshooter from White Plains, N. Y., who took the lead yesterday by carding a 65, was unable to keep up the pace and turned in a 70 and 75 for the last 36 holes, ending up with a 210.

E. J. (Dutch) Harrison, Marvin Stahl and Horton Smith were tied at 211. Smith was the touch luck golfer today. His approach shots were perfect, but his putts almost always fell short, never by more than 6 inches and often coming to a stop on the brim of the cup.

Leading scorers:

Ed Oliver, Hornell, N. Y., 69, 72, 64—205—$700.

Ben Hogan, White Plains, N. Y., 71, 66, 69—206—$450.

Clayton Heafner, Linville, N. C., 74, 66, 67—207—$315.

Leonard Dodson, Kansas City, 69, 70, 68—207—$315.

Lloyd Mangrum, Chicago, 70, 67, 71—208—$200.

John Perelli, Lake Tahoe, Calif., 70, 70, 68—208—$200.

Sam Byrd, Philadelphia, 68, 73, 68—209—$150.

Vic Ghezzi, Deal, N. J., 72, 68, 69—209—$150.

Paul Runyan, White Plains, N. Y., 65, 70, 75—210—$120.

E. J. Harrison, Little Rock, Ark., 68, 67, 75—211—$90.

Marvin Stahl, Lansing, Mich., 71, 72, 68—211—$90.

Rabin's 16 Points Pace Local Pros

Heurich Five Wins First of Last 14 Games With Leaders Before 850 Fans

Washington Heurich Brewers defeated the Philadelphia Sphas, American Pro Basketball League leaders, 43 to 33 before an overflow crowd of 850 yesterday on the Heurich court.

The Sphas, playing the second of three games scheduled in 24 hours, had beaten the Brewers the last 13 times the teams met before the Brewers snapped the streak by the 10-point margin and picked up a full game on the league leaders. Heurich is in third place, back of the Troy Celtics.

The Sphas reduced Heurich's 24 point lead with a rally in the last few minutes of play but it fell far short of tying the count. The winners were ahead, 40-16, before the Sphas showed any traces of their previous form and outscored the local five, 17 points to three in the closing minutes.

The former teammate of the Sphas, Phil Rabin, was the indivdual star with 16 points. His five long field goals and six successful foul shots easily led the scorers. Mike Bloom dropped three field goals and held Moe Goldman scoreless while Whitey Wilson, Mike Posnack and Ben Kramer were also outstanding for the Brewers.

Rabin and "Red" Rosan, of the Sphas, came to blows in the final period. The losers were led by Joe Gotthofer, who sparked the futile comeback in the final period. Heurich led 18-6 at the first period and 32-14 at the end of the second.

Fred Apostoli Greatly Improved

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—Fred Apostoli, battered into submission Friday night in a light-heavyweight boxing bout with Melio Bettina and rushed to Polyclinic Hospital—where he was also found to be suffering from an attack of grippe—was greatly improved today.

His nurse said the fighter felt better and added, "I don't imagine he will be here much longer if his present improvement continues."

'Chief' Hogsett Joins A's List of Holdouts

Philadelphia, Feb. 4 (AP).—Elon (Chief) Hogsett, 36-year-old left handed pitcher drafted from Minneapolis by the Athletics, has returned his contract unsigned, Connie Mack, of the Athletics, said tonight.

Hogsett is the third Athletic player to become a holdout. First Baseman Dick Siebert and Catcher Frankie Hayes announced several days ago they want more money.

Calladine Stars As D. C. Team Is Held To but 17 Tries at Goal

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Feb. 4.—The Baltimore Orioles overwhelmed Washington, 4 to 0, in an Eastern amateur hockey game tonight, with Norman Calladine scoring two goals and assisting in the other two.

Washington was held to only 17 tries for goal while Baltimore tried 44 times. Four whizzed by the goalie.

The Orioles seemed inspired by the announcement of Pick Hines, their coach, that he had married Miss Jo Williams in Toronto Thursday.

Shanks Wins 'Hap' Burtner Sweepstakes

Northeast Bowler Tops Convention Hall Field 11Pins for $150 Prize

Elvin Shanks, a lean, lanky bowler from the Northeast Temple League who puts every pound behind a speedy duckpin ball, won the "Hap" Burtner Sweepstakes last night at Convention Hall over a field of 90 "near-star" bowlers who were shooting for $536 in prize money.

Shanks, a 122 average bowler in the Northeast Temple and Mount Rainier leagues, counted 1,336 duckpins in the ten games, added a 60-pin handicap and finished on top by an 11-pin margin. Shanks pocketed $150 first prize of the largest purse in the history of local handicap events. Wootten Young, president of Convention Hall, added $100 to the prize fund.

The Northeast Temple League furnished the first three finishers as Ed Heller and Gene Smith trailed in second and third place. Heller rolled sets of 623 and 596, plus a 166-pin handicap for 1,385 while Smith's totals were a 582 first block, 634 second and also a 166-pin handicap for 1,382. Their respective prizes were $80 and $60.

Handicaps were figured from a scratch of 128, with 2-3 of the difference allowed. The limit was 20 pins per game. The 90 entries was a record field for the event, with a majority of the city's "second flight" bowlers entered. The ranking pinmen were competing in the Easterday Sweeps in Baltimore

Grayson Fourth

G. H. Grayson, Warrenton, Va., one of the three out-of-town bowlers entered, took fourth prize of $50 with sets of 582 and 634, plus 132 pins for a 1,377 grand total.

Charles "Chilly" Barnard, winner of this event last year and in 1937 when it honored former manager Charley Bell, was fifth with a 1,375 total, including a 175 game, highest of the day. His prize was $40.

Burt Lynn was two pins back for sixth money of $30, the Silver Spring American League bowler posting a total of 1,373, including his handicap. Dave Singer, of the Singer Brothers duo of Dave and Julius, carried the name of the Hebrew League in the money with 1,348 for $25.

Reds Morgan was eighth with 1,346 for $20, while Ralph Bates was a single stick back for a $17.50 award. Clarence E. Purdy, G. P. O. League bowler and prominent golfer, was next with 1,340 for $15 while Pete Metrakos had 1,337 total for $12.50. Otto Santini, brother of the leading money winner of the season, Tony Santini toow twelfth and last prize of $10 with 1,334.

O. Brown's 1,755 game in the the second won $6.50 block prizes, the second won $6.550 block prizes, while the consolation set cash awards went to I. Lang with 706 in the first block and J. B. Smith, 699 in the second. Jenkins started the final block with 144 and 166 for 310 and had 442 for three games but his next effort was 95 that kept him out of the money.

Shanks rolled all his first block games in the 119 to 131 circle as he posted 627. But after starting his second five games with 135 and 124 he hit his stride with consecutive games of 153 and 168 to take the lead. He finished with 129 for the winning count.—M. W. W.

Music Goes Around and 'Round Fight Ring for Terp Student

Maryland Has Its 'Golden Boy' in Piano Player, Boxer, 127-Pound Bob Bradley

By Al Hailey

Boxing, music and scholastic achievement make strange mates, but there's a fighter out at the University of Maryland who puts them all into one basket and does it rather nicely.

He's Bob Bradley, 22-year-old graduate student from Hyattsville, Md.

Bob's case is analogous to that of filmdom's "Golden Boy" in that the hands he uses to such good advantage in boxing are vital to his music. He's a piano player, one of exceptional talent.

For three years Bob has combined his music and fighting without having the two conflict, but this year he has been forced into "deemphasizing" his most cherished hobby—playing the piano with a college dance orchestra.

He still plays in the University Glee Club, however, and usually handles the accompaniament when guest artists appear at Maryland for concerts.

Crossed the Ocean

Bob is a "little shot," physically speaking only, however. Now in full-time possession of the 127-pound position on the Terrapins' varsity boxing team, he doesn't have as much time as he did while an undergraduate to devote to the music which has taken him across an ocean and into several foreign countries.

As far as his activities are concerned, Bradley can be termed in campus lingo as a "big shot." In addition to his fighting and music, he's working on master's degree in accountancy. He was graduated last June with his bachelor of science in commerce. On the social side, Bradley is a member of Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity.

The punishment that a fighter's hands take in the ring just this year is making its presence known to Bradley when he sits down to play the piano.

"I never have had any trouble with my hands until just recently. Now when I play I can feel a sort of discomfort in this hand," Bob said, nodding toward the left thumb he injured in a practice session recently.

No Excuse for Injury

Bob was sitting at a keyboard caressing the ivories lovingly with a touch that had hints of "Fats" Waller and Eddie Duchin in it.

"You know there's no excuse for a fighter's hands getting hurt if they're taped right," he mused, hardly noticing a small crowd attracted by his playing.

"How did I get interested in boxing? Well, I guess it was because some of my friends were boxing and they interested me in it. But I think that most of the little fellows like to box—it gives everybody a chance, regardless of size," he said.

Along with several other students from Maryland, Bob joined an orchestra in the summer of 1938 on a transatlantic steamer and ended up in Paris, France. But he's not going to make music his life work—or boxing either, for that matter.

"I've often thought about music," he confessed. "I'd like to compose or arrange, but that's mostly a closed racket now. I do a lot of improvising . . . sheet music is just propaganda."

Riggs Wins Net Tourney At Pensacola

By the Associated Press

Pensacola, Fla., Feb. 4.—Bobby Riggs, of Chicago, came from far behind to beat Gardnar Mulloy, Miami, in the finals of the Pensacola invitational tennis tournament here today.

Mulloy won the first two sets easily, 6—1, 6—2, forcing Riggs into repeated errors. The national champion then steadied and, playing a deep court game that kept Mulloy on the run, won three straight sets, 6—3, 6—3, 6—4. Mulloy held a 4-2 lead in games in the final set, but Riggs broke the tall Miamian's service twice to click off four straight games and the match.

Mulloy and Henry Prusoff, Seattle, Wash., won the doubles title, beating Riggs and Elwood Cooke, Portland, Oreg., 6—2, 4—6, 9—7. It was the Mulloy-Prusoff combination's fourth straight winter tournament doubles triumph.

Takoma Win Two

Takoma Junior Firemen Basketball Club took a twin bill yesterday at the Takoma Armory. In the first game they defeated G. A. P. A., 30-28, and in the nightcap took the measure of Seven Seas Grill, 52-39. Eddie Laake was the star against the Grill team, scoring 16 points.

Greenskeepers Promise 'Break' For Duffers at Annual Conclave

'Artificial Hazards' to Furnish Discussion; Sand Traps Called 'Silly'

By the United Press

New York, Feb. 4—The men who spend their lives keeping America's golf courses in shape are out to give the "duffer" a break.

A thousand of these fairway manicurists—the Greenkeeping Superintendents Association of America—go into their fourteenth annual huddle Tuesday i nthe Hotel New Yorker. And the word passed out tonight by the President—Frank W. Ermer of Cleveland—is that "too many artificial hazards are retarding the progress of the sport."

"Sand traps are silly," Ermer said, "and we will try to pass legislation, and possibly pass these recommendations along to the United States Golf Association, to standardize the number of traps allowed on a course."

The purpose of the Greenkeeping organization is "to advance, collect, preserve and disseminate knowledge and information for more efficient and economical maintenance of golf courses." Ermer said that cutting down on traps would increase the number of players, speed up the game and cut maintenance costs at least 5 per cent.

His contention is that the game should be given back to "the 85 per cent of America's 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 golfers who have trouble breaking 100."

"It is not necessary to confront the average duffer with an array of sand traps resembling the Maginot Line," Ermer said. "The unsung hero of golf, the duffer, undergoes enough mental agony trying to manipulate the various clubs in his none too accurate path toward the cup.

"Having seen golf grow from a rich man's game into a sport that is truly democratic, I can truthfully say that patronage on my own courses has increased when unnecessary hazards were removed."

Ermer said that most of the present unfair bunkers filled with sand owe their presence on American courses to pioneer designers who tried to ape the native contours of golf courses in Scotland.

Fenske's Mile Victory Acclaimed

Garden Performance Called Greatest Race Ever Run on Boards

By the Associated Press

New York, Feb. 4.—It was called the thirty-third renewal of the Millrose games but that was a glaring misnomer.

Actually the track meet run off in Madison Square Garden Saturday night was only a highly-colored backdrop for the amazing performance of Chuck Fenske, of Wisconsin, who ran the second fastest indoor mile ever recorded, won acclaim as the new king of the American milers and the overwhelming vote of the New York sportswriters as the outstanding performer of the games.

That's quite a night's work, but Fenske earned it—and also the earsplitting tribute that 16,000 maddened fans accorded him for the most pulsating performance in a meet that saw five records shattered beyond repair.

Blaine Rideout Helps

In what undoubtedly was the greatest competitive mile race ever run on a board track, Fenske won th lavishly-touted Wannamaker mile in 4:07.4 by 3 yards from Glenn Cunningham, the old master who was making his last try for the Millrose trophy he had won six times previously.

And Chuck can thank Blaine Rideout, one of the Texas track twins, for part of that victory. For Blaine set a terrific early pace that at the three-quarters mark was within hailing distance of the new world indoor record that won the ¾ mile race for Johnny Borican later in the evening.

Fenske's grand performance,

This Morning

Without Shirley Povich

By Ben Bane Dulaney.
Post Sports Editor

If you're with a fellow for 30 minutes who claims he's a news photographer and during that 30 minutes he hasn't complained about anything at all—then he's lying about his business.

For that's the one attribute held in common by all the camera boys.

DULANEY

The world for them is a sad and gloomy place peopled by bawling picture editors, city editors who make mistakes about assignments, head photographers with superman ideas about being at the Mayflower at 8:30, Griffith Stadium at 8:31 and the Rockville Baptist Church at 8:32.

The world for them would be happy indeed without arch society editors, snarling sports editors, artistic Sunday editors. They pine for a lush gay world lacking coy ladies who have to be pursuaded to pose, important gentlemen who just haven't the time, self-appointed masters of ceremonies who insist on arranging groups just the wrong way.

Yes, news cameramen in general are a gloomy, griping, beefing lot who grow old before their time. But your photographer who handles sports looks with contempt upon the boys who cover Capitol Hill, conventions, and card parties. He can multiply their glooms, gripes and beefs a thousandfold.

They Have Excuses for Hockey, Baseball

Sports photographers must get action, action, ACTION. Newsmen have occasional fires, floods, catastrophes. Sometimes they're lucky enough to catch an accident while it's happening. But mostly their jobs are waiting for them; the robbery has been committed, the illustrious speaker is at the head table.

Because good action is hard to get and many a photographer comes back with a collection of plates fit only for inclusion in one of Dali's particularly bad nightmares, the sports picture-snapper has developed a set of alibis unsurpassable.

An experienced sports desk man can chant the following answers almost in unison with the excuse artist:

Why did you get this knockout picture from such an angle that all I see are the two satin-covered behinds of the boxers? How was I to know which way he was going to fall. You can only stand on one side of the ring, can't you?

This would be a beautiful hockey shot except it looks like midnight in London during a fog and an air raid. Just try to get anything good at Riverside. Everybody smokes and besides all the hot breath on the ice makes an awful haze.

The score was 11 to 8 and still the only action you got at this baseball game was Case sliding back to first base. Why, man, I was out there for two hours and there just wasn't any action. Everybody hit clean singles or home runs.

How about Farkas catching this touchdown pass. Where'd he get the extra four hands? Something went wrong with my synchronizer. Besides I think he has six hands anyhow.

Oh, boy, what a basketball pileup. What game was it? I don't know, it was a doubleheader and the city desk hurried me so much I couldn't stop to ask.

How come you go all the way to Baltimore and don't get a picture of the finish of the Preakness? These shots of jocks with floral decorations are a dime a dozen. No answer. (The truth was the photographer had $2 on a 20-to-1 shot which ran second and got so excited he forgot his camera.

And so on.

An Agate Line Is His Only Credit

When a cameraman comes in with a really fine picture and triumphantly plops it on the sports desk without alibis, all he can expect is a surly "pretty good" and maybe his last name in agate type under the caption. That's one good reason why the world to him is as sour as lemon juice.

The sports photographer plods around in mud and rain. He takes excellent college knockout pix to discover that particular university won't allow them used. He drives 200 miles to a night event to find the place won't permit flash bulbs. He takes abuse from umpires and referees. A 300-pound wrestler is tossed upon him and what had been his camera. Twelve men and a football carried out of bounds hit him while he's minding his own business on the sidelines. These are some more good reasons why the world is as sour to him a persimmons before the frost.

But even the sports photographer has his day off. Then he goes to baseball games, basketball games, fights. He goes without his camera. We think he goes, not so much to see the games but to gloat at the slaves darting about with their litle black boxes. For a day, he is free.

Stop the Presses! Babe Ruth Called Free Agent by 'Landis'

It's All in Fun, However, at Baseball Writers' Annual Dinner in New York

By the Associated Press

New York, Feb. 4.—Babe Ruth was declared a free agent by a shaggy white haired old man remotely resembling Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis tonight, but it was all in fun for 1,100 guests of the New York Baseball Writers' seventeenth annual dinner.

The writers spared few feelings as they lampooned Landis and the game's other greats. The way for Manager Gabby Hartnett of the Chicago Cubs to reduce, they let it be known, was for him to sit in the stands and watch himself manage an all-star team. The reason Ernie Lombardi remained beside the empty plate in the world series was because he was waiting for desert and coffee.

But the most hilarious skit of the show featured Landis (portrayed by Ken Smith, of the New York Mirror) and Leslie O'Connor (Lou Effrat, of the New York Times).

O'Connor said he had something on Donald Barnes, president of the St. Louis Browns:

"Why every night before he goes to bed he covers up his canary."

"Say, I'd like to get something like that on the Yankees," shouted Landis. "I wonder if Ed Barrow covers up the radiator of his car."

Landis made an inspection of Babe Ruth's 1922 contract and thought it was a forgery. After he found it wasn't, he barked, "Aw hell, let's make him a free agent anyway."

He also freed 104 Boston Red Sox players, padlocked Fenway Park for six months and fined Tom Yawkey $189,675.25.

And Joe Di Maggio:

"There's a fellow I'd like to make a free agent," Landis said. "Why it'd be like the crush hour in Gimbels' basement."

Barrow Gets Plaque

After the writers finished frolicking they presented a plaque to Barrow, president of the Yankees, for "meritorious service to baseball over a long period of years" and another to Bucky Walters, Cincinnati pitcher and most valuable player in the National League, as the "outstanding player of the year."

Many prominent figures in sports, politics and other fields made short speeches. They included Herbert Hoover, former President of the United States; Postmaster General James A. Farley, Senator Gerald Nye, Gen. Hugh Johnson, Honus Wagner, Comedian Joe Cook and Ford Frick and William Harridge, presidents of the National and American Leagues.

President's Message Cites Interest in Game

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—President Roosevelt sent his annual greeting to baseball writers and fans tonight in a message read at the seventeenth annual dinner of the New York Chapter of the Baseball Writers Association. The message said:

"I think it should be a matter of peculiar satisfaction, as baseball goes into its second century, that there is no lessening of interest in the great national sport.

"It is indeed gratifying to learn that last season baseball attendance all over the country set a new record.

"The mission of the baseball writer is two-fold. The fans like to read what their favorite commentator has to say about the game, even though they have watched every play. To those people away from the diamond the writer is an indispensable guide, mentor and friend.

"My heartiest greetings and best wishes to all who attend the seventeenth annual dinner of the baseball writers of New York.

"Very sincerely,

"FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT."

Louis-Godoy Fight Betting to Be in Full Swing Tomorrow

Heavy Drop Expected in Odds on Joe

Uncertainty of Godoy Condition Checks Wagering Men's Zeal; Champ 7-1 Favorite

By the United Press

New York, Feb. 4.—Heavy betting is expected to start tomorrow on the Joe Louis-Arturo Godoy heavyweight title fight, slated for Madison Square Garden Friday night.

Thus far, wagering men have shied away from this 15-round brawl becaue of uncertainty over Challenger Godoy's condition. Rumors from the Chilean's camp during the past week indicated that he was suffering from a cold and sore throat.

But during the week-end, physicians examined Arturo at his Summit, N. J., camp and found him to be in "perfect condition."

That's why tonight's odds, favoring Champion Louis, will be shortened considerably before the men climb into the ring for the first international heavyweight title tilt ever staged in the Garden.

Odds Absurd

Price-maker Eddie Borden quoted the odds tonight as: 7-1 that Louis wins the fight; even money that Godoy does not last five rounds; 2-1 that Godoy does not last 10 rounds, and 4 to 1 that he does not go the full 15 rounds. These figures are almost as absurd as the 11 to 1 that favored Louis over Max Schmeling for their first battle, when Schmeling kayoed the bomber, and the 15-1 that favored Louis over Tony Galento last summer, when the fat barkeeper almost kayoed the champion twice.

Godoy supporters are expected to show with their dough on battlers' bund tomorrow, now that the out-of-condition rumors have been quashed. These supporters will include many "smart boys" of Jacobs' beach, anxious to get in on the long odds.

With Godoy in condition, the "smart boys" figure the challenger has an excellent chance to last the distance for three major reasons: (1) Because of his record, (2) because of his style, and (3) because he is being pointed for this encounter by shrewd Al Weill, the ring's master stylist.

At Summit today, Godoy went through six fast rounds with three sparmates—Bill Poland, James J. Johnson and Jimmy Smith—without drawing a deep breath. He will lay off tomorrow and conclude his training with six rounds of sparring on Tuesday. Arturo scaled 205 pounds today, about two more than his fight weight. Meanwhile Louis registered 204 at Pompton Lakes, N. J., after six rounds with four mates. The champion expects to fight at 201, about 2 pounds less than the challenger.

Weill Steps In

Godoy, who has beaten Galento twice, and never been knocked off his feet in 65 professional fights, was impressive again today with his aggressive bobbing and weaving tactics. Tommy Farr, a mediocre performer, used these tactics and lasted 15 heats with Bomber Joe.

Trainer Whitey Bimstein, one of the Big Five fight handlers, is conditioning Arturo, but Manager Weill is personally supervising his boxing tactics. Throughout Gladiators Gulch, Weill is recognized as the ring's master stylist. Probably no man in the world can point a fighter so perfectly for a certain opponent as rotund Al.

Ken Quigley Upset In Badminton Final

A big smile is Mary Whittemore's reaction to her victory over Elinore Behr in the finals of the D. C. Invitation Badminton Tournament yesterday, 11-5, 11-3

No. 3 Ranking Star Loses to Stephens, No. 6, by 9–15, 15–7 And 15-10; Girl Favorites Score

Clinton Stephens, sixth ranking badminton player of the country, provided the only upset as the finals of the third annual District Invitation badminton tournament were run off yesterday at Kensington Armory, the clever New York racqueter defeating Ken Quigley, No. 3 in the United States, by scores of 9—15, 15—7 and 15—10.

Stephens, seeded No. 2 in the tourney under Quigly, used the first game to "feel out" his highly-regarded opponent and then turned on the heat to win as he pleased. The victory easily avenged a lacing Stephens suffered at the hands of Quigly last year in the national tournament.

The women's singles, as anticipated were won easily enough by Mary Whittemore, Boston, national champion who turned in an 11—5, 11—3 triumph over Baltimore's Elinore Behr yesterday.

Mrs. Behr, the former Miss Abbott, was never able to threaten Miss Whittemore in defense of the crown she took in 1939. And Miss Whittemore took no chances against the No. 5 ranking star, putting everything she had into every stroke.

Wanda Bergman and Helen Gibson, United States women's doubles titlists, came through their specialty though with a little trouble, beating Patsy Donovan and Pearl Nichols in the semi-finals, 15—8, 5—15 and 12—12, and then fighting to the finish to edge out Miss Whittemore and Mrs. Behr, 15—8 and 18—16, in the finals. The Whittemore-Behr combine took its semifinal match from Mary Hagan and Wilma Markt, 15—10, 13—15 and 15—1.

New York's Paul Vanso and George Harris, after going three games to eliminate Wilmington's Endsley Fairman and Joe Shields, lightly skipped through their finals engagement with Julian Burges and Jack Laindeer to win, 15—7, 15—8. The winners took leads early in each game and coasted to victory.

To their respective victories in the doubles, Mrs. Bergman and Vanso added the mixed doubles crown when they held the Stephens-Hagan duo to but 9 points in each of two straight games. They defeated Helen Gibson and Fairman in the semi-finals, 15—7, 15—9, at the same time that Stephens and Hagan were trouncing Nichols and Quigley, 15—7, 15—8.

Despite the dominance of favorites, the tourney was called one of the best in its history at the conclusion of hostilities. Crowds, as in previous years, were light during the first rounds, but increased as the meet progressed, and a large gathering was on hand yesterday.

McAvoy Here Today for Brown Fight

Get a firm grip on the arms of your chair—Mickey McAvoy, the the unknown heavyweight who has been chosen for Natie Brown's inaugural comeback attempt tomorrow night in Turner's arena, is coming to town today.

Mickey, according to the propaganda, weighs 215 pounds and is breathing fire and brimstone to flatten our hero. Upon his arrival, Mickey is going to rush right down to the Huron gymnasium, 511 Eleventh street northwest, and hold a final workout, to which one and all will be invited. His calisthenics are set for 2 p. m.

While everybody knows about the old Washington warrior, Natie, practically nothing is known about McAvoy except that there is a McAvoy.

Everybody knows this because his name is mentioned in the best boxing record books—once. The record shows he was knocked out in the eighth round of a 1937 encounter by Italo Colonello.

Natie, knocked out in his last fight a year ago this month by Tony Galento in Detroit, is nobody's push-over when he's in shape, and the propagandists all insist that he's in the pink. Natie expects to weigh in tomorrow at 215, just 45 pounds less than he weighed three months ago.

His comeback performance tops tomorrow's card of three eight-rounders. The other two bring together Phil Furr and Danny Devlin and El Brookman and Eddie Finazzo, all welterweights.

Arturo Seems to Be in a 'Transom'

Dodgers Bidding For Cullenbine

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—Larry MacPhail, president of the Brooklyn Dodgers said tonight that his club was interested in getting Roy Cullenbine, Detroit Tiger outfielder, who was one of 91 players cut adrift by the recent ruling of baseball commissioner, K. M. Landis.

Queried at the baseball writers dinner tonight, MacPhail said, "we made him an offer—and so have eight other clubs."

Other officials of the Dodgers indicated that they had offered Cullenbine a large sum—possibly as much as $25,000—to sign, and that the next step was up to the young outfielder.

J. C. C. Five Faces FBI in League

An interesting game in second half Heurich Amateur Basketball League competition will be offered as the 9:30 o'clock nightcap of a triple-header tonight when the Jewish Community Center's Big Five engages the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

In supporting contests, Bantam-Press meets United Clay at 7:30 and Q. & S. Laundry engages Garvin's Grill at 8:30 o'clock.

The Jewish Community Center, which is to play Delaware & Hudson for the first half Heurich League title at Heurich gymnasium on February 19, faces a tartar in F. B. I. The "G-Men" upset D. & H. in one of the outstanding games of the first-half competition.

Freisinger Wins Speed Skate Crown

Overcomes Lead of Del Lamb to Take Title; 20,000 Watch

By the Associated Press

Schenectady, N. Y., Feb. 4.—Leo Freisinger, 23-year-old Chicago physical educator, came up with a rush in the final day of the North American outdoor speed skating championships today, to snatch the men's title from Del Lamb, of Milwaukee.

Trailing Lamb by 10 points in the scoring race, Leo placed second to the Milwaukee youth in a bitterly fought 440-yard dash, then came from nowhere in the three-quarter mile race, to win by inches.

Lamb's victory in the 440 was his only point-gaining performance of the day, and was not enough to hold his two-day lead against Freisinger's comeback.

At the same time, Madeline "Maddy" Horn retained the North American women's championship by skating to decisive triumphs in the 440-yard and mile races.

"Maddy" announced her retirement from competition with today's racing, insisting that her decision was "final." The sandy-haired Wisconsin speedster, winner in more than 60 races and loser in less than 5 since she began skating in 1932, reconsidered an earlier "retirement" announcement to enter the North American meet.

Freisinger's three-day point total was 120, and Lamb's 110, with defending Champion Chuck Leighton, of Chicago, third with 90.

"Maddy" amassed an imposing total of 140 points, winning four races and placing second in another.

The men's champion had a tremendous crowd of nearly 20,000 screaming encouragement as he skated wide on the last lap of the ¾-mile and passed the entire field of six, to win half a stride ahead of Joe Bree, of New York, and Ken Bartholomew, of Minneapolis.

Lamb had been eliminated in a semifinal of the same event.

Hokie Smith Wins 4th Pin Event of Year

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, Feb. 4.—Hokie Smith, sharpshooting duckpin ace from Washington, D. C., won his fourth tournament of the season in this city here tonight with a victory in the Julian Easterday Sweepstakes, worth $150.

The young assistant manager of the Columbia Bowling Alleys in the Nation's Capital rolled 1,983 for the 15 games, to top the field of 88 Maryland, Virginia, Connecticut and D. C. stars. He previously won the Kirkwood, Frank Jett and Von Dreele events in Baltimore.

Smith rolled the most consistent duckpins of the day with five-game set totals of 673, 646 and 664, with a 154 game highest in the string. He finished 14 pins ahead of Earl Campbell, of this city, who rolled sets of 685-618-666 for $75 second prize. Tony Pedro, Baltimore, was third with 1,950, woth $60, and Winnie Guerke, this city, fourth with 1,952 for $45.

Astor Clarke, the Nation's top-ranking pinman from Washington, started with a powerful 182 game, biggest of the day, and won $35 for a fifth-place total of 1,920. Clarke's sets were 685, 604 and 632. He was one stic kahead of the other D. C. bowler that finished in the money, Frank Mischou, who rolled 671-638-610 for 1,919, worth $19. Buck Shane, Baltimore, also had 1919.

Five Monumental City pinmen took the next five money places: Ray Foirentino, 1,915; Carl Pace, 1,912; W. Stitz, 1,900, and Joe Rimback with a like count.

St. Paul Skiier Wins With 197-Foot Jump

St. Paul, Feb. 4 (AP).—Sverre Fredheim of St. Paul, wearing the colors of the Gateway Ski Club, Land O'Lakes, Wis., scored 151.2 points with leaps of 190 and 197 feet to win Class A honors in the Central United States Ski Association tournament here today.

Brothers May Be Gloves Fight Finalists

Nick, John Mancini Appear Certain to Meet For Welterweight Title

A battle of brothers for the welterweight championship appeared in the offing yesterday after a look over the line-up for this week's leg of the Golden Gloves boxing tournament.

This eventuality hinges on the outcome of the semifinals Wednesday night at Turner's arena. The brothers are Nick Mancini, 19, and 20-year-old John Mancini, both of Pete's Athletic Club.

Nick will meet Billy Kekeris, the National Guard star, and John will take on Jim Perrow, veteran tourney campaigner also of the National Guard.

Amateur fight fans are predicting an all-Mancini night Wednesday and a rare, old family "feud" next week as the result.

Nick defeated Kekeris when the two met last October in a benefit show in Griffith stadium and is favored for a repeat performance, while John is considered too tough for Perrow.

In the finals of the A. A. U. tournament last year John defeated Nick after he had been floored once by his younger brother.

"These kids have been fighting since they were knee-high," Sailor Odon, coach at Pete's A. C., said. "I expect to see them out there again next week."

Nine novice fights and seven senior bouts are on the card for Wednesday's semifinals beginning at 8:30 p. m.

Hoya Relay Team Out of PennGames; Reason—No Foes

The Rev. John J. Kehoe, S. J., faculty director of athletics at Georgetown University, yesterday announced receipt of a telegram from Lawson Robertson, Penn U. track coach, advising him that the Hayos' entry in the 2-mile relay of the Penn A. C. games Friday night had been cancelled.

Other colleges, the telegram said, had withdrawn their teams for various reasons, making it necessary to cut the race from the list of events.

The cancellation killed Georgetown's chance of winning its third straight 2-mile event this year. Saturday night the Hoyas scored an impressive triumph over Holy Cross and Manhattan in the annual Millrose games, running the distance in 3:21.6, believed the fastest time ever achieved by a Georgetown quartet.

The relay team, along with 21 other Hoya trackmen, will now concentrate its energies on the Maryland U.—Fifth Regiment games in Baltimore on Saturday night.

Alaire Captures Comet Regatta

San Juan, P. R., Feb. 4 (U.P.).—Charles Allaire, of West Palm Beach, Fla., and Red Bank, N. J., won the midwinter comet class regatta today with a total of 73¼ points as he piloted his yacht Marglo Too home second in the final heat today after winning the opening heat February 2 and finishing second yesterday.

Luis A. Santa-Ella, of San Juan, finished second with 69 points; Teddy Gonzalez, Puerto Rico, third with 68½, and Dr. Anthony J. Leitner, of Perth Amboy, N. J., fourth with 67.

Gonzalez piloted Arcoiris, owned by Malcolm Lamborne, jr., of Washington, D. C., around the 5-mile course in record-breaking time of 1 hour 17 minutes 12 seconds, to win the final heat today. Allaire sailed in second and Santa-Ella, third.

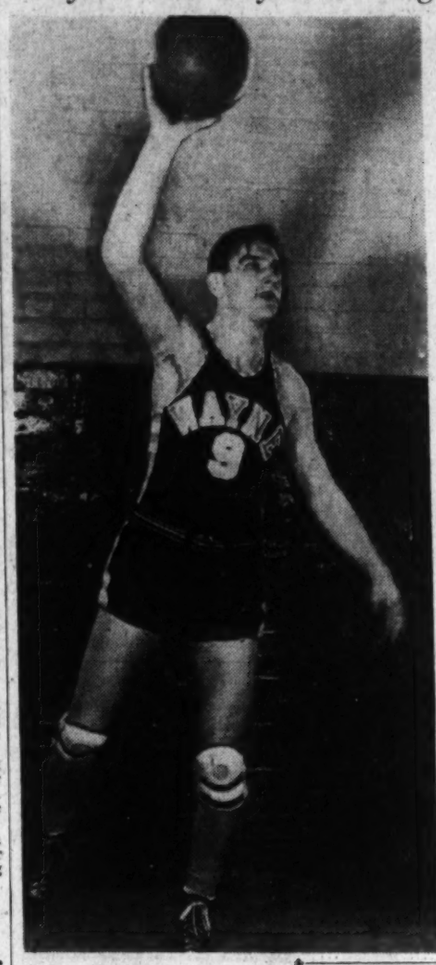
Key Man on Wayne U.'s Cage Team



Carl Shultz, rangy forward of the Wayne University team which meets George Washington University here tomorrow night; is a comparative dwarf among his teammates. He stands 6 feet and is a consistent scorer and playmaker, but three of Wayne's regulars are in the neighborhood of 6 feet 3. Tonight Wayne plays Mount St. Mary's at Frederick, Md.

Two Victories Add to Wayne, G. W. Contest

Detroit Five Meets Mounts Tonight, Colonials Tomorrow

Two teams apparently in top form will clash here tomorrow night when George Washington University's basketers are host to the strong team representing Wayne University, of Detroit, at Tech High gym.

Wayne opened its Eastern swing on Saturday by trouncing the University of Buffalo, 49-22, while G. W. regained its winning stride at Charlottesville by beating Virginia in an overtime contest. The victory was Wayne's sixth in ten games and was convincing proof that the Tartars bring a high-powered scoring machine to face the Colonials, a team that is in peak form now.

Tonight Wayne moves within 50 miles of Washington to meet Mount St. Mary's at Frederick, Md., on its second stop. Coach Bill Reinhart will scout Wayne in this game. He expects plenty of trouble from the Midwestern visitors.

Wayne's most impressive victories were scored over Oregon and Iowa, and the Tartars' record belies their real strength. Three of their four defeats have been by three points or less. Marquette beat them, 42-39, in one of their slim defeats.

The George Washington team achieved its ninth victory in 12 starts by some sparkling play in the extra period against Virginia. The Colonials, who showed definite improvement over their play against Army, controlled the ball almost the entire five-minute overtime stanza. They pushed in two field goals to a single foul for Virginia, and that was the margin of victory.

Reds Auerbach, senior guard, maintained his grip on the scoring lead among G. W. players although he scored but a single field goal against the Cavaliers. His total now is 104 points; Sophomore Matt Zunic is next with 97, and Capt. George Garber and Joe Comer each have 96.

Eagles Host To Rovers At Riverside

League Leaders Again Present Strong Club; Large Crowd Expected

After enviously eyeing the New York Rovers and their Eastern Amateur Hockey League lead from a distance for several weeks, the Washington Eagles tomorrow night come face to face with the champs at Riverside Stadium, starting at 8:30.

Though first place will still belong to the Rovers after the game, no matter what the outcome, the local hockeyists look to the clash as a crucial test of their chances of overtaking the hot New York team. The Eagles are the only Eastern League club with an advantage over New York in games played to date, their record being four won and three lost. The hosts will be out to bost their edge, just as the Rovers will be aiming to make their dominance unanimous.

In Albert Collings and Frank Boucher, jr., the Rovers boast the leading scorers of the league and the games most brilliant "comer." There is little doubt that Collings will take the scoring championship but his young, baby-faced mate, at present in fourth place in scoring, is expected to be the sensation of the league before the season is over.

Junior member of one of the greatest hockey-playing families in the country, Boucher has been called a cinch to play with the New York Rangers in the next two years. He and Collings are both centers.

In addition to these, three other Rover stars are listed among the league's first 10 scorers. Murdo McKay is in second place, and a little farther down are Mitchell Pechet and Len Loree. The Eagles will counter with Hal Dewey, third-ranking point maker, and Roy Covert and Les Ramsay.

If advance sales are any indication, tomorrow's scrap, following the Eagles riot-marked game with the Port Colbourne Sailors, will bring out the biggest hockey crowd of the year.

Cady's High School Point Lead Lessened

Friends' Newmyer Approaches Leader With 18-Point Effort

A mere six-point performance, usually considered pretty fair scoring, almost lost the lead in the District's schoolboy point race for Frank Cady, St. John's forward, as his team eked out a 28-27 victory over Gonzaga last Thursday.

At the same time that Cady was being handcuffed by the Johnnies' ace rival, little Armand Newmyer, Sidwell Friends star, was turning in an 18-point effort against Gaithersburg, bringing him within a few tenths of a point of Cady's average per game. Newmyer's average is now 13.60, and Cady's 13.81. The latter still holds the high point position with 152, however.

Another little prep school ace, Landon's Baker, also boosted his average with 14 points in his team's 36-24 loss to Wilson. He took third place with an average of 12.33, the result of 74 points scored in six games.

Two Roosevelt High players, Hymie Perlo and Ernie Travis, proved the best of the interhigh scorers in this week's compilation of records. Perlo's 116 points in 12 games entitled him to fourth place and a 9.66 average, while Travis was in seventh with an 8.76 rating.

Right under Cady, a pair of cagers from suburban schools are deadlocked for the most prolific scoring marks. Johnny Shumate, of Bethesda, and Shorty Alexander, of Washington-Lee, each have 130 points to their credit. Alexander has played in two more games than Shumate, however. His 16 outings are more than any other player can claim.

Rangers Hand Canadiens 9-0 Record Defeat

New York, Feb. 4 (INS).—New York's record-carving Rangers hung up another mark for the season tonight as they waltzed through the last-place Canadiens, 9 to 0, to give them the worst shellacking ever handed a team in the Garden.

The Patrickmen made a Roman holiday of it, all players except Kerr, the goalie, and Mac Colville getting at least a point in the scoring. It was the highest team total handed in this season and the sixth shutout of the term for the Ranger netminder.

Rangers rang up a brace of tallies in the opening chukker, got three more in the middle frame and continued their successive improvement by gathering four in the final period.

Boston Bruins Bury N. Y. Americans, 7-1

Boston, Feb. 4 (AP).—Minus Eddie Shore's inspiration, the New York Americans were plowed under, 7-1, by the champion Boston Bruins tonight in a one-sided National Hockey League engagement at Boston Garden.

It was the Americans' first setback since they traded Eddie Wiseman to Boston for Shore three games ago. Because the latter had notified his admirers in advance that he would not appear here, the crowd totaled about 8,500, one of the smallest of the Boston season.

Detroit Holds Chicago To 1-1 Overtime Tie

Chicago, Feb. 4 (INS).—The Detroit Red Wings stretched their undefeated streak in the National Hockey League to seven games here tonight by holding the Chicago Black Hawks to a 1-to-1 tie before 12,241 fans in an overtime struggle.

It was the second straight tie for Detroit against Chicago, but it did the Red Wings little good as far as the standings are concerned. The one point derived from the deadlock enabled the Hawks to maintain their fourth place, two game lead over the Wings.

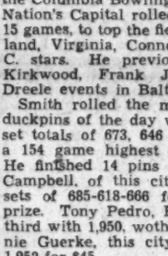
On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, Feb. 4.—Among the sports writers at the welcome-here whisky and conversation party for Paavo Nurmi and Taisto Maki yesterday was Lester Rodney, sports editor of the Daily Worker, the Communist daily. Harold Conrad, of the Brooklyn Eagle, was talking to Herbert Hoover, head of the Finnish relief fund, when he noticed Rodney at the Scotch trough, ordering some capitalistic hootch.



CONSIDINE

"Mr. Hoover," Conrad said, "I want you to meet the gentleman from the Daily Worker." He steered the former President over and introduced him:

"Your paper has been belting my brains out lately," Hoover said to Rodney, with a nervous laugh.

Rodney shrugged. "Because you're helping the Finns, I guess," he said.

"You forget this," Hoover told him with a slight rise in choler. "In 1923 when Russia was starving I raised $75,000,000 for its people."

Not White Russians—Just Hungry Ones

"They must've been White Russians," Rodney said.

"They were just Russians . . . Russian people," Hoover insisted. "They must have been. I got a testimonial of thanks signed by Lenin and Trotsky."

After that he went to the other side of Buddy Fogelson's big suite at the Waldorf, inoffensively edging through the crowded, noisy room and stood quietly by Nurmi and Maki while the big, scoured Finnish consul general, T. O. Vahervuori, made a good, loud talk thanking him for the work he has done in raising funds for the sufferers in the little nation. Hoover made a short reply, welcoming the runners and wishing him and their beleaguered countrymen well.

The reporters moved in on Maki, worked for a while with a translater, then discarded that translator in favor of the big, gentle pug, Gunnar Barlund, whom Jimmie Bronson, the boxing promoter, had brought to the party. Among other things the Gunnar is a boxing writer for the Helsinki Sanomat. Barlund turned out to be a great go-between, for he could understand the language—the sportswriters' language.

Maki is short, wiry, applecheeked, cheerful, curly-haired, 29, married and the father of a seven-year-old daughter. Nurmi is a little taller, gray-faced, sparse-haired, rather severe looking, with bloodless lips and with a monsyllabic air about him. He edged away and let Maki, who has broken some of his records, take the interview.

Prefers a Longer Jaunt Every Time

Through Barlund, Maki said that his best running distance is from two miles up and that he should reduce his own two-mile record from 8:53 to 8:50. He doesn't like to run the mile. In Finland, until the war started, he worked for an alcohol company. He was in the army from October 13 until Christmas, saw action as one of those white-clad, skiing Finnish fighters, and came down with rheumatism in his knee.

We asked Barlund to ask him what kind of fighters the Russians were and anything else about them he could think of saying. The big heavy leaned over and repeated what we said in Finnish, and listened to Maki's reply. Then he said, "He says they're bums. He thinks he might have killed maybe ten." Maki beamed brightly at this.

Maki added, through Barlund, that he is in good shape, that they ate well enough at the front to have "bean soup one night, potato soup next," and that he will be in shape to run his best on March 3 when he opens his coast-to-coast tour in Los Angeles. He has no special diet, and a kind of a bright confidence that isn't cockiness as much as it is a sincere and disarming belief in himself. He never had a coach, he said, and when somebody asked him if he could break the last record Nurmi holds—that of running 12 miles in an hour—he said "oh, yes, easy." He said it in English. He has never run indoors.

Worry Over Holdings Bothers Nurmi

Nurmi was gloomier, but interesting. He has a big haberdashery shop and a sports-goods house, and a string of apartments, in Helsinki, and was worried about how they survived the day's bombing. Partly in halting English, partly through an interpretor, he said that he was 42 but that he still did considerable cross-country running and that he believed he could do the mile in 4:25 and the two miles in 9:15. He weighs 152 now, only eight more pounds than he did 15 years ago when he was at his peak.

He said there wasn't any mystery to why Glenn Cunningham and others have broken his records. "They're better," he said. "I was never a miler, even though I ran the mile and held the record. I held a lot of records, but even then I realized that many of them were no good, particularly the shorter distances."

The only animation he showed was when he spoke of his hope of running against Joie Ray again, and of Helsinki's alabaster-like Olympic Stadium. He said he wondered for a long time why the Russians had not bombed it, for it is the biggest target in Helsinki. Now he's convinced that they use it as a guide and a landmark for other bombing. Like Maki, he wants to get back. He was so homesick an hour after arriving in New York that he pulled on some old clothes and took a brooding, lonely walk through the lightly snow-covered Central Park.

Turf's Topflight Stables to Have Entries in $50,000 Widener

Whitney Clan Represented In Big Race

Woodward, Bradley, Phipps and Riddle Among Owners With Contenders on List

Hialeah, Fla., Feb. 4.—Most of the leading stables, the owners of which are the pillars of the American turf, are included in the list of nominators for the Widener, the $50,000 classic handicap which will climax the current meeting of the Miami Jockey Club at beautiful Hialeah Park on March 2. The original list totaled 46, one of the largest in the annals of the fixture. And, incidentally, of the 75 entries, 49 remain eligible.

Heading the nominators is William Woodward, chairman of the jockey club, and the leading winning owner of 1939, who races in the name of the Belair Stud. His candidates for the Widener are Olympus, Valerian and Bosley which carried his silks in England last year.

John Hay Whitney, a scion of the famous racing family, member of the New York State Racing Commission, and of the Jockey Club, also has three entries. His mother, Mrs. Payne Whitney, owner of the popular Greentree Stable, and "First Lady" of the American turf, has four. Another distinguished lady owner with representatives in the Widener is Mrs. Henry Carnegie Phipps, who races in the colors of the Wheatley Stable, named after her Long Island home in the Wheatley Hills. And, another fair bidder for the prize is Mrs. Elizabeth Graham Lewis, better known to her sex as Elizabeth Arden.

Boeing's Horses Ready

The West Coast is well represented in the Widener. W. E. Boeing, head of the great aircraft manufacturing company that bears his name, has transferred his racing activities from California to Florida this season. C. S. Howard has nominated, but is unlikely to start, Seabiscuit and Kayak II; the Binglin Stock Farm, owned by Bing Crosby and Lin Howard, a son of C. S. Howard, has two candidates, and likewise the Circle "M" Ranch, owned by Mrs. Edward S. Moore, of Sheridan, Wyom.

Owners of previous Widener winners will try again. Warren Wright, whose Calumet Farm harbors Bull Lea, last year's winner, will try again with Easy Mon, as the former has been withdrawn.

Samuel D. Riddle, owner of the Glen Riddle Farms stable, and War Admiral, has a couple of hopefuls in Tall Story and Get Off.

And, of course, one of the most important eligibles is Challendon, last season's top horse, which carried the colors of W. L. Brann, Maryland breeder, who was recently elected to the Jockey Club.

Looking down the list we find E. R. Bradley, master of Idle Hour Farm, winner of four Kentucky Derbies, and owner of Bimelech, the winter book favorite for this year's Blue Grass classic; Townsend B. Martin, New York socialite and sportsman; Louis B. Mayer, head of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Maxwell Howard, owner of Stagehand and other good horses; Marshall Field and Robert L. Gerry, Jockey Club members; the Woolford Farm, whose Kansas-bred Kentucky Derby winner began his racing career at Hialeah, and Dewitt Page, a prominent figure in the automotive industry, who races in the name of Taemere Farm.

Trophy to Winner

The Widener, with a purse of $50,000 in added money, has been the richest event for older horses on the Eastern tracks. In addition to the gold, the glory also is considerable because the winner takes a high place in the American racing scene. Also a beautiful trophy may be won. Joseph E. Widener, chairman of the board of the Miami Jockey Club, is offering a historic silver gilt cup which will become the property of the owner winning it twice.

The Everglades Stakes of $2,000 added, to be run here, has drawn 85 nominations. The Everglades is at 3 furlongs for 2-year-old fillies.

The counterpart to the Everglades is the Seminole Stakes for 2-year-old colts and geldings to be run February 14. The Seminole closed with 89 entries.

Leading nominator to the Everglades is the Calumet Farm which named nine juveniles. The Woolford Farm listed five, and John Hay Whitney and King Ranch four each.

For the Seminole, the Calumet Farm placed 15 on the list. Woolford Farm is next with six, and John Hay Whitney, Greentree Stable and Leo J. Marks, five each.

Carnegie Tech Signs Glassford; Has 8-Game Card

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Feb. 4.—William (Biff) Glassford, one-time star guard at Pitt, has been named line coach of the Carnegie Tech football squad, it was disclosed today with the release of an eight-game schedule for next season.

The 24-year-old coach who captained the Panthers in their Rose Bowl victory over the University of Washington in 1937, has been assisting Head Coach Herb Kopf, of Manhattan College, for the last two years.

The 1940 schedule calls for four major and four minor contests with one game on November 16, yet to be arranged. Two dates, October 5 and November 23, are permanently open.

The schedule:

At home—September 28, Geneva; October 26, Case School of Applied Science; November 9, Pitt; November 30, Duquesne.

Away—October 12, Holy Cross at Worcester, Mass.; October 19, Notre Dame at South Bend, Ind.; November 2, Cincinnati at Cincinnati, Ohio; November 16, pending.

'Little Jockey Who Wasn't There' Rides Second Horse at Santa Anita

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Real Clear, a 3-year-old filly, is shown above doing her best without the benefit of a rider in last Saturday's feature race in California. The jockey had fallen to the track at the start. That's Fairy Chant, from the Foxcatcher Farm, winning. Omelet (No. 3) is second with Sweet Nancy third. The race was run in "California dew."

Selections at Hialeah Park

Dear Al—Although we wound up with only two winners, we were giving them a good battle last Saturday. We had Ship Biscuit, that $47.90 shot, in the second hole and almost wrecked the world with Star Mint in the last race. This one paid $30.30 to show and was 75 to 1 to win and, in my estimation, got a punk ride, being forced to come from twelfth position after getting off last. Anyway, I made Camisado pretty strong and he galloped home by eight lengths. That's the way I like to see them win. Willie duPont's Foxcatcher Farm may have an ace up its sleeve in Fairy Chant, winner of last Saturday's Santa Margarita Handicap at Santa Anita. The filly jogged along in front, the chart shows, and now is regarded as a threat in the coming $50,000 added Santa Anita Derby. Fairy Chant is well known to Maryland fans. The Foxcatcher people have a way of going about conditioning horses without a lot of noise, and they win plenty of big money. West Coast fans always will remember 1937 when Rosemont, of Foxcatcher, took down the $100,000 race after Fairy Hill has garnered the Derby for that same barn. The California racing colony has about given up hope that W. L. Brann's Challedon will come out for the hundred grand test on March 2. So far, I have seen nothing to indicate that Challedon will go in the $50,000 Widener in Florida, either. He is now at Columbia, S. C., and, as it is only an overnight hop to Miami, Trainer Lou Schaffer may take him down. In a way, I doubt the good judgment of racing Challedon in Florida. It will necessitate getting him in top shape by the end of this month. From that time until New York and Pimlico open there is not a race worthy of him. From February to May is a long time to keep a good horse on edge and too short a time for a real letdown. I will be interested to see just what the Brann-Schaffer combination, which has clicked so far, will do in this case. It looks as if Red Dock, from Mrs. Payne Whitney's Green Tree Stable, is definitely Kentucky Derby bound. The Peace Chance gelding turned on plenty of heat to win last Saturday's 7-furlong feature in excellent style. While 7 furlongs is not the mile and a quarter of the Derby, Red Dock gave every evidence of a distance runner in winning "going away." True he had 9 pounds the better of Victory Morn and 13 pounds less than Charlienfeld. Confucius say: Calling may give answer to third race problem. BILL.

First race—Bettie Nux comes to this juvenile hop, skip and jump recommended by fair workouts. Gets the benefit of the clear, outside post in the straightaway and I'm going to string along. Maedixie has plenty of speed and will be there or thereabouts if able to escape trouble out of the inside stall. I Bid probably will be the third one.

Second race—Satiation appears ready to graduate from the maiden ranks in this field. Flinchum is slated to do the riding. Mellowmoon has been well back on occasions and is dangerous. Turbie is a possible surprise.

Third race—Looks as if I'm trying to make it "Flinchum Day." The sensational apprentice is scheduled to ride Naadja in this field and I'm forced to go along with him. Cerisse III has shown excellent form here and will be hard to keep out of the pay. I'm not so sure that Calling won't be a keen factor. Belongs in the pay circle.

Fourth race—Domkin needed that last out, appears ready to carry 120 pounds to victory in this company. Alfred Robertson will do the booting. Any price will be a good one. Gooseberry and Inscolad may be the ones to fill out the money positions.

Fifth race—Mar Le gets my call in this vest-pocket affair. Likes the route and is improving. Royal Blue will appreciate the 100-pound assignment and is fit. Counterpoise should have something to say about the cash distribution.

Sixth race—Weary Flower, given only 104 pounds, may prove the right one in this distance event. Mike Caffarella will do the booting and the combination deserves backing. Black Demon and Conrad Mann seem to have slight edges on the others.

Seventh race—Diabroom has some races that, if repeated, would make him a dangerous factor if not the winner in this company. I'm going to jake my chances and root for a good ride. Winged Victory and Bertillion to battle it out if the top one fails us.

Eighth race—Miss B. B. has demonstrated her speed and I believe she can go the route. I see no reason for mistakes. Stand Alone and High Arch are good and will be in the thick of contention.

Best bet—Domkin.

Fair Grounds Holds S.P.C.A. Benefit Races

Sunday Charity Card Draws Small Crowd As Popular Vote Wins

By the Associated Press

New Orleans, Feb. 4.—The Fair Grounds inaugurated its Sunday charity racing today with eight claiming events before a slim crowd.

Proceeds went to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

The Sunday racing will continue until the track is closed March 3, when the $12,000 added Louisiana Derby will be run.

There was no feature race today. The most interesting was the sixth at a mile and 70 yards, taken by M. D. Livingston's Popular Vote, with Apprentice Arnold Sorsen up. Ace of Spades was second and Rossman third.

The winner moved up steadily, took command in the stretch and scored by a comfortable margin. Popular Vote paid $16.80 for $2 in the mutuels. Time was 1:48.

Bena Bane, with Pat Milligan in the saddle, accounted for the best sprint event, stepping 6 furlongs in 1:15 over the fast track. Blind Star was second and Blacky Bee third. Ben Bane paid $8.60 to win.

Arlin Bassett, 18, of Dodge City, Kans., rode his first winner on Arthur B., in the seventh race, paying $20.60 to win.

Hoyas Host To Temple Wednesday

Pajak Expected to Lead Attack Against Owls at Tech Gym

One of Georgetown University's greatest scoring stars of recent years returns to Tech High School's gymnasium Wednesday night when the Hoyas entertain Temple University's Owls at 8:30 o'clock.

George Pajak, sensational junior guard who hit a 41-point scoring pace in an invasion of New York State last week and who supplied the climax punch as Georgetown upset Army, will be extended a warm reception by Georgetown's well wishers when he takes the floor against Temple.

Pajak, who scored 14 points against Army and who is hailed as one of the finest players to invade West Point in several years, also scored 12 points against Syracuse University and 17 against Colgate although the Hoyas lost both games.

Coach Elmer Ripley, Pajak's staunchest booster within the past two seasons, naturally is delighted at the showing of his outstanding basketer, but also maintains that Buddy O'Grady and a fine supporting cast played its part in Georgetown's unexpected defeat of Army.

"We played our best basketball of the season against Army, but we also were impressive against Syracuse and Colgate in defeat," Ripley contends. "We now are going out to avenge our early season 28 to 39 loss against Temple and feel reasonably certain we'll turn the trick."

Temple University was nosed out by New York University by a two-point margin before 8,000 persons at the Philadelphia Coliseum Saturday. The Owls have won over the University of Texas, Oklahoma, Michigan State and New Mexico Aggies and will rule a slight favorite to make it two in a row over the Hoyas here.

Georgetown's freshmen will meet the Federal Bureau of Investigation in a preliminary game at 7 o'clock.

Referee Berger In for Bad Night With Cox, Eustace

Joe Cox and Alan Eustace will take possession of the semifinal Thursday night at Turner's arena, and it looks like a bad night for Referee Casey Berger.

Cox, along with Lou Plummer, who is in the feature match, has a mad on against Berger because of alleged favoritism to their respective opponents last week.

Joe was disqualified because of ungentlemanly tactics with Crusher Casey, and Lou was ordered out of the ring because of roughness with Don Evans, whom he meets in a return affair.

Louis' Title Defense Tops Week's Fights

Tony Galento To Referee In Baltimore

Slated to Officiate In McDowell-Montanari Meeting Thursday

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Feb. 4.—"Two Ton Tony" Galento, the National Boxing Association's No. 1 contender, and a seeming certainty to gain a second meeting with Champion Joe Louis during the coming summer, will invade Baltimore Thursday night and referee the ten-rounder featuring Bill McDowell and Francisco Montanari.

Galento welcomed the opportunity to serve as third man when the bell sends McDowell and Montanari, two of the welterweight division's roughest warriors, into action. "I have long contended," Galento stated, "that referees spoil most fights by being too particular about the rules. I know McDowell and Montanari and I plan to let them toss leather until one, or the other, gives out. Neither one can expect any help from me if they start complaining about minor infractions of the rules.

"Remember," concluded Galento, "no one enters the ring to kiss an opponent. I'll show them how to produce bigger and better fights by manding my own business. That is, unless either of 'em gets rough with me. Then I'll have to knock 'em out."

Fenske's Mile Victory Hailed By Writers

eclipsed indoors only by Cunningham's 4:04.4 in a special handicap race where his only foe was the stop-watch, was a smartly executed piece of business in which the raven-haired Wisconsin student, after catching the flying Rideout on the seventh lap, built himself a comfortable lead (one time of 25 yards) and grimly held on.

Set Fast Pace

Cunningham, Gene Venzke, of the New York A. C., and Lou Zamperini, IC-4A outdoor mile champion, all "went after him, but Fenske held his pace through the last four heart-stopping laps and though they cut him down, they couldn't pass him. Cunnigham was clocked in 4:07.7—not bad for an old man about to retire—and Venzke edged out Zamperini for third as both were caught in 4:08.2—the fastest either had run in his career.

That overshadowed a night of wild excitement that was otherwise highlighted by Don Lash's new 2-mile meet record of 9:00.9; by John B rican's first indoor winning effort—a world indoor record setting 3:02.6 in the ¾-mile run; by New York University's fine relay team, anchored by Jimmy Herbert, the Millrose "600" winner, which did its mile stint in a meet-record breaking 3:19.8, and by John Woodruff, the greatest outdoor half-miler, who finally won an indoor race—a sparkling 1:52.8 for the Millrose 880 in time that has never been equaled in the Garden.

5 Millrose Finishers Entered at Boston

Boston, Feb. 4 (AP).—All five finishers in the Millrose Game's blistering 4:07.4 Wanamaker mile will comprise the classic Hunter field in Saturday's Boston Garden Meet, Boston A. A. officials announced tonight.

Chuck Fenske, the Wisconsin star, will attempt to gain his third triumph over Glenn Cunningham in as many weeks, Gene Venzke, who defeated the famous Kansan here in the Veterans of Foreign Wars meet, also will be a Hunter starter, along with Lou Zamperini and Blaine Rideout.

The quintet ran in that order in Saturday night's Millrose Games at New York and all but Rideout were clocked under 4:09 as Fenske equalled the Madison Square Garden's track record while defeating Cunningham by three yards.

He had the same margin on the Kansan here in the Prout Meet's mile, which was raced in 4:10.3.

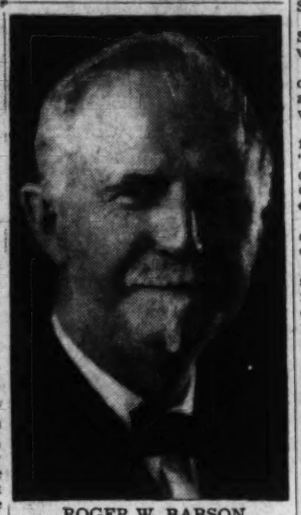
'Supertax' Would Raise Havoc With Upswing, Babson Asserts

Economist Fears Congress, Economy-Minded In Election Year, Will Force Through Levies That Hit Business and Boost Jobless

Babson Park, Mass., Feb. 4.—It is going full blast again! The familiar seeds of New Year economy, budget-balancing, pay-as-you-go talk are being sown. As usual, the June harvest will be a big deficit, no real economies, another attempt to persecute business. This year's economy talk makes me sadder than ever. The sheer hypocrisy, the brazen effrontery on budgetary and fiscal matters shocks me. How simple it is to hoodwink the public on finances—and it has been done shamelessly for eight years.

The New Deal rode into Washington on an economy platform. "I ask you very simply to assign to me the task of reducing the annual operating expenses of your Government. . . ."—"It is my pledge and promise that rigid Government economy shall be inforced by a stern and unremitting Government policy of living within our income. . . ." Thus spoke Candidate Roosevelt in 1932. No promises could have been more completely shattered than these. President Roosevelt promptly doubled spending. As his eighth consecutive budget deficit went to Congress last month, his "rigid economies" had succeeded in doubling the Nation's debt.



ROGER W. BABSON

Economy Hopes Fade

Every January there has been much talk of economy, drastic paring down of expenses, cutting appropriations to the bone. Each January there is talk behind the scenes about the need for new taxes. Then late each session a huge deficiency bill is railroaded through. Late each session heat is put on the tax committee to prevent any increase in taxes except on big corporations and millionaires. Each year the national debt gets bigger. Each year there is less and less hope the budget will ever be balanced, that "rigid economy" can ever be practiced in public places.

Worst of all, however, is 1940. This is an election year. No one ever expects Congress to be economy-minded in an election year. Congress was economy-minded last year, but the Administration was tooth and nail against economy. Now what does the Administration do? The President, knowing Congress will oppose direct economy and will fight new taxes, harps on economy, cries about the need to put defense on a pay-as-you-go basis, brings out the familiar—but still effective—bromides about balancing the budget.

Why the Sudden Concern?

It is not necessary to discuss this demand of the President for economy. Most everybody sees through that. But this pay-as-you-go defense is another matter. (A recent Gallup Poll showed that 58 per cent of the voters favored such a policy.) It seems ridiculous to me that the voters should suddenly become concerned about saddling the cost of a billion-dollar defense program on future generations when they have cheerfully allowed the Administration to borrow untold billions to squander on plowing up cotton, raising leaves and destroying little pigs.

The point that bothers me is that the Administration, if backed by popular approval, may try to force new taxes on Congress this year. Nearly 500 Congressmen must be reelected this year. Few of them will vote for the right kind of a tax in election year. They will not hand their opponents a ready-made bang-up, vote-getting issue on a silver platter. Under great pressure (which I am not forecasting will be brought to bear) they might well enact a new tax but it will be the wrong kind of a tax—another tax to discourage new employers and to force existing employers out of business.

The right kind of a tax would encourage everyone to work harder, to produce more, to earn more. Such a tax means a broadening of the income tax base. Every voter would then know that when he cast his ballot for a spendthrift Congressman his vote would hit his own pocketbook—not just Henry Ford's, J. P. Morgan's, Alfred Sloan's. Putting this kind of tax bill through in 1940, however, would be politically impossible. Instead, the discussion is centering around a "super-tax" on those who already pay income taxes. Ten to 15 per cent is the figure talked about. How many new projects will this super-tax squelch? How many expansion plans will it pigeonhole? How many jobs will it nip in the bud?

This "supertax" would raise havoc with our current upswing. Big income taxes have hurt the country and the unemployed more than they have ever helped them. Here is an interesting tabulation:

Year.	National Income.	Peak Tax Rate.
1922	61,100,000,000	58
1923	69,300,000,000	58
1924	71,900,000,000	46
1925	76,300,000,000	25
1939	70,000,000,000	79

Is it merely a coincidence that national income (which after all is mainly workers' income) soared from 1921 to 1925, while the peak tax dropped from 73 to 25 per cent?

Risk Too Great

Today's top rate is back to 79 per cent. And there are State and inheritance taxes to boot! Maybe that is why national income can't buck through the $70,000,000,000 figure, why Government receipts are far below Government expenses. In effect, the Government's tax policies mean that a wealthy businessman can no longer afford to take business chances. A $200,000 loss this year, for instance, can be recovered only after four successive years of $200,000 profits! Voters must learn that the cards are not only stacked against the big businessman but also against the jobless workers whom he might employ. Let us be honest and recognize the facts!"

Steel Activity Drops in Week On Cold Siege

Operations Fall 5% To September Low, Survey Shows

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Feb. 4.—The cold wave helped steel production toboggan last week. Operations fell off 5 points to 76½ per cent of capacity, Steel reported today.

This is the lowest point since last September, but it compares favorably with 53 per cent a year ago.

Extreme winter weather throughout most of the country cut down activity in building materials, pipe, wire products and galvanized sheets.

"Revival in building is indicated for spring," the magazine Steel said. "There is little pessimism in the industry notwithstanding the lag in orders and steadily declining operations.

"New buying of about 50 per cent of producing capacity is indicative of fairly active consumption."

The Youngstown, Ohio district suffered most severely in the current slump. Production there dropped 17 points last week to 51 per cent "and will go lower this week," Steel's survey reported.

Pig iron production in January was the largest in history for that month, but shipments have declined rather substantially the past few weeks. Tin plate production dropped 4 points last week to 65 per cent.

Scrap prices declined, mostly at Pittsburgh and Chicago. The composite was off 21 cents to $17.38.

The only increases in production were Detroit's 6 points to 93 per cent, Wheeling, 2 to 82, and Cleveland, 1 to 75. Declines included Pittsburgh, 5 points to 73 per cent; Chicago, 5½ to 85½; Eastern Pennsylvania, 2 to 78; Buffalo, 6½ to 60½; Birmingham, 4 to 90; New England, 9 to 66; Cincinnati, 10 to 64½; St. Louis, 13 to 70.

Three blast furnaces were banked at Youngstown and one at Chicago. Another was shut down for repairs at Birmingham.

A.T.&T. Reports 94,000 Increase in Telephones

New York, Feb. 3, (AP).—American Telephone & Telegraph Co reported today a gain during Januray of about 94,000 telephones in service bringing the total to about 16,630,200. The gain in the previous month was 80,800, and in January, 1939, it was 63,400.

Gillan Runs Again

Waynesboro, Pa., Feb. 4.—C. Frank Gillan, of St. Thomas, member of the Pennsylvania Legislature and fruit grower, has announced his candidacy for reelection in the spring primary. He is not expected to have opposition on the Republican ticket.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

The Four Aces crack contract bridge players, warn their followers against indiscriminately opening short suits in defending three no-trump declarations. During the last few years the short-suit lead at no trump has become increasingly popular until some players, going to the extreme, practically never lead their own long suit.

The short suit lead will bring excellent results but rarely unless the lead has been preluded by sound analysis.

The Four Aces offer specific reasons for making the unconventional opening which we have condensed as follows:

♠ J8643 ♡954 ◇732 ♣84

"And have to select a lead against three no trump. From your hand it appears as though the opponents should have bid a slam, but, as they did not, your partner must have a fair hand. Your spade suit is hopeless. Only a miracle could bring about its establishment, therefore you should try to 'find' your partner. While there is no guarantee of its success, your best chance is to lead hearts, the other major suit.

2. When you have a hand full of tenaces and are afraid you will lose a trick by leading from any one of them:

♠ KJ65 ♡1093 ◇K1064 ♣AJ

"To lead from the doubleton is out of the question. You may lose one of the stoppers in spades or diamonds by leading either suit. Your hand has good defensive possibilities and you should play a 'waiting' game, forcing declarer to do his own leading. Your best opening is the ten of hearts. While it may not accomplish anything, it is extremely unlikely to cost a trick.

3. When you have a rather good long suit not headed by the ace and have no possible re-entry:

♠ 843 ♡J5 ◇62 ♣KJ9743

Most players would shudder if any opening lead other than a club were suggested. Yet the Four Aces maintain that the chances for running out this club suit are so remote that it is not worth leading. They recommend the spade eight instead. An intelligent partner will know very quickly that it is an unorthodox opening. Furthermore, he may be able to read from his own and dummy's cards that your suit is clubs and shift to it when he obtains the lead.

with Slocum

Down through the generations the males of my family have been cursed with a fatal illness. Ever since the first Slocum could say "I love my wife, but oh, you kid" and "23 skidoo" we have been battling hopelessly against our curse—Follies Girls. And we've had it in all forms, the Ziegfeld and the Minsky.

So when they dragged me by the neck from the sinful confines of the Stork Club and tossed me on a Washington train a few months ago, Mother (not a Follies girl) sighed happily and said, "Now he'll be away from those Follies girls. I wonder where I can send his father?"

You can imagine my mingled joy and fear when I wandered around the studios of WJSV, brushing elbows with underpaid executives and spoiled announcers, and I came upon a full-fledged Follies girl prattling into a microphone about things you can buy in local shops. She was billed as "Jean Abbey," but it didn't fool me for a minute. She was a Follies girl. And she wasn't Jean Abbey.

She uses Jean Abbey because it's a nice name, easy to remember. Her real name is Meredith Howard, and she picked 'em up and set 'em down for Florenz Ziegfeld in his last contribution to the American Association of Oculists.

Miss Howard is extremely purty and terribly busy. It's astounding how busy she is. For instance, every night for three solid months she was so busy fixing up her stamp collection that she couldn't go to the library with me to look at some old books.

She is actually the East Coast, or Road Company, of the Howard Girls, three, count 'em, three. Her twin sister is married to some Hollywood gentleman high in the movie industry who is named Lou Wertheimer. Her younger sister is Mary Howard, who did such a nice job in "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" and did a better job on the District's starry-eyed younger males last week.

Meredith was once fashion publicist for M-G-M and abandoned that to accept a job in Washington because she feels that her true racket is a woman fashion commentator and Washington is as good a place as any to launch such a career.

When are you going to finish that stamp collection, Meredith?

THE DRAGON'S TEETH

By ELLERY QUEEN

Chapter 23

WHEN BEAU plodded into his apartment he pulled off his clothes, set the alarm of his 98-cent clock, and threw himself onto the bed.

The alarm went off before noon. He opened his eyes with a groan.

"Sure feels like a hangover," he muttered. "Only worse."

He crawled out of bed, danced under a cold shower, shaved, dressed and went out.

On the corner he stopped in at a cigar store for two packs of cigarettes and a nutted chocolate bar. Munching the chocolate, he headed for the subway.

KERRIE awoke from an exhausted sleep just before 9. Vi was tossing and snoring on the other bed.

Kerrie crept out of bed and peeped into the sitting room. Sergt. Velie was gone, but another detective was reading the morning paper in the armchair. When he saw her he quickly hid the headlines. She shivered and closed the door.

When Vi awoke it was noon and Kerrie was fully dressed, seated at one of the bedroom windows staring out into the court, her hands in her lap.

Vi said something, but Kerrie did not reply. The blonde girl yawned, and then made a face, and then joined Kerrie at the window.

"Kerrie!"

Kerrie looked up, surprised. "Oh, you're up. What?"

"Don't you see those rubbernecks?"

"What?"

The windows facing their side of the court were densely peopled. Women, men, at least two staring children; and in one window an enterprising reporter was shouting questions across the court as he leaned perilously out.

"I didn't see them," said Kerrie indifferently.

Vi yanked down the shade, and after a moment, as if she were just conscious of the reporter's shouts, Kerrie closed the window, too.

It was a curiously peaceful day. Occasionally the door from the sitting room to the corridor opened and slammed as a detective came in. Men were coming in and out all day. There was some activity in 1726, too; Vi peeped from the window and could see men hustling about in there.

But no one entered the bedroom except a detective; and he came in only because Vi, after trying vainly to rouse the telephone operator, complained that they were starving.

"Okay," said the detective. "Why didn't you ask before?"

"Ask?"

"No tickee, no washee." He went out.

"They've cut the line," said Vi in a scared voice.

Kerrie said nothing.

Fifteen minutes later the detective wheeled a table in which was laden with food. He went out immediately.

"Come on, hon. We may as well stoke up."

"Yes," said Kerrie.

She sat down at the table and toyed with a slice of toast. She looked calm enough; only a certain air of abstraction, a deepening of the two lines from her nostrils to the corners of her mouth, pointed to anything unusual inside her.

Vi saw it and said in a small voice: "Kerrie, dear, you've simply got to eat. You haven't eaten——"

"I'm not hungry, Vi."

Kerrie went back to the window.

Vi sighed. She finished her breakfast and, after hesitating, Kerrie's, too. She took a bath, borrowed fresh underwear and stockings from Kerrie, dressed, and then the two of them sat still, without conversation, all the long afternoon.

BY 9 O'CLOCK in the evening Vi was ready to scream. Any noise—a cough, a cry, sobbing—would have been relief. But Kerrie just sat with her hands folded in her lap like some female Buddha carved from stone.

. And then there was a commotion outside, the noise of many voices, at least one scuffle. Vi jumped up. Even Kerrie turned her head.

The bedroom door opened and Sergt. Velie, accompanied by several strange men, stood there. The sergeant was carrying a folded paper.

Kerrie rose, pale.

"I've got a warrant here," said the sergeant in a flat voice, "for the arrest of Kerrie Shawn. Miss Shawn, will you get ready?"

After that, things became confused, like a motion picture run wild. A cameraman managed to pierce the cordon outside, and bulbs began to flash, and detectives shouted, and reporters wormed through, and there was almost a free-for-all. In the tumult Vi got Kerrie into her hat and a light camel's-hair coat, and Sergt. Velie said Vi couldn't go along, and Vi clung to Kerrie, weeping, until Kerrie said sharply: "Don't act like a baby, Vi!" and kissed her goodby; and after a while Vi found herself almost alone in 1724, in the midst of bulbs and newspapers and articles of Kerrie's wardrobe, and she sat down on the floor and cried for the benefit of two female reporters who had remained behind for sinister purposes of their own.

They even helped Vi, when she gathered strength enough to stand up, to get Kerrie's things together in the suitcases, asking questions all the way like two jabbering jays until Vi swore at them and threatened weepily to bang their sleek heads together.

Finally she managed to escape with Kerrie's bag and the aid of a policeman. One of the two newspaperwomen said: "Nuts," with disgust, and they followed the course of empire southward, to Center street.

Vi reached her hotel with her hat over one ear. When she walked through the lobby she thought two men looked at her in a hard, suspicious way. She locked herself in her room.

Then the telephone began ringing. After a half-hour she told the operator not to ring her at all. So people began knocking at her door. She rang the hotel operator again and threatened to call the police if the pests didn't stop knocking.

The operator said: "Yes, madam—hold on a minute," and then said: "Sorry, Madam—it is the police," and Vi opened the door, and one of the two men who had looked at her hard and suspiciously said not to try any funny stuff but just stay put, sister, see?

"Stay put," screamed Vi. "You think you're hanging that rap around my neck, too, you wall-eyed flatties?"

"We're not sayin' nothin'," said the other man. "Just take a little friendly advice, see, blondie?"

Vi slammed the door, locked it.

After that her telephone did not ring and her door was not knocked upon. And she stayed put.

BEAU burst into Inspector Queen's office at police headquarters, roaring mad.

"What the hell's the idea, pop! What was I picked up for?" Then he saw Kerrie. He said slowly: "What's this?"

Kerrie looked at him with eyes of liquid pain.

"I wanted to talk to you," said inspector Queen. He seemed a little shrunken through his spare, wiry body. "As for Miss Shawn, we've decided to hold her for—well, technically as a material witness. But we all know what for."

There were three other men present. Beau recognized them all. One was a stenographer. The other two were assistants of District Attorney Sampson's.

"She's innocent," said Beau. "She told you how it really happened. The real killer was in 1726. He shot Margo through the window across the angle of the court, then tossed in the roscoe. Kerrie picked it up; she was dazed."

"Is that all you've got to say?" asked the inspector in a queer tone.

"Isn't the truth enough for you?" snarled Beau.

"One moment," Kerrie's voice was calm, low-pitched. "Inspector Queen, you've accused me of murdering my cousin, and I admit the circumstances——"

"Don't admit anything!" yelled Beau. "Let me handle——"

"Please." She looked at him, and he turned away. "I admit the circumstances are against me. But if I shot Margo, I must have had a motive. What was my motive?"

"We know your motive," said the inspector.

"I couldn't possibly have any! You mean I hated her, I was—jealous of her on account of . . . my husband? But if I were, wouldn't I have shot her before I was married? I had nothing to be jealous about, inspector. We were married. Would I have waited until after my marriage to kill her?"

The inspector did not reply. The stenographer was quietly recording the conversation, and the two men from the district attorney's office were listening in a strained silence.

"Or you might say," Kerrie went on, "that I wanted to put Margo out of the way in order to gain financially. But that can't be so, either, you see, because my marriage cut me out of Uncle Cadmus' will. I couldn't possibly inherit Margo's share; in fact, I'd even forfeited my own. So don't you see how silly this charge is? There isn't a reason in the world why I should have wanted to kill Margo!"

"But there is," said the inspector in a flat tone.

"What could it possibly be?"

"Something like $2,500 a week for life."

"But I just told you," said Kerrie, bewildered. "Mr. Goossens—Mr. De Carlos will confirm—the will——"

"Yeah," mumbled Beau. "What's the matter with you, pop?"

"It's true," said the inspector in a tired voice, "that this girl has no gain-motive if she were married at the time of the murder." He paused, then repeated: "If she were married."

Kerrie sprang to her feet. "What do you mean?"

"It won't do you the least good to put on an act," replied the old man gruffly.

"Ellery!" Kerrie ran to Beau, shook him. "What is your father talking about? Tell me!"

Beau said nothing. But Kerrie saw his eyes, and let go of him with a sudden gesture of revulsion. She stood still where she was, the last drop of color draining from her face.

"I received a wire this afternoon," said the inspector, "which amounted to an anonymous tip. We weren't able to trace the tipster, because the message had been telephoned into the telegraph office from a midtown pay station. But the tipster wasn't nearly as important as the tip. We followed that up right away, and it was right. Miss Shawn——"

"MISS SHAWN?" whispered Kerrie.

"Miss Shawn you weren't married last night. The marriage was a fake. It was an attempt to lay a clever smokescreen down so that it would look as if you had no motive to kill your cousin Margo. You still share in your uncle's estate; you still take over Margo's share. What do you say now?"

"Not married last night . . . Why, that's simply—that's simply not true! We were. In Counnecticut. Near Greenwich. By a justice of the peace named—named Johnston. Weren't we? Ellery, weren't we?"

A frenzy took possession of her. She seized Beau's arm, shaking him, her eyes wild and wide with horror.

"And that isn't all!" shouted the inspector suddenly, growing crimson. "This man isn't my son—his name's not Ellery! It isn't even Queen! His name is Beau Rummell, and he's my son's partner in a confounded private detective agency!"

"Beau — Rummell?" whispered Kerrie. She stumbled back to her chair and sat down, fumbling in her bag for a handkerchief. She remained that way, her eyes on her bag, her fingers fumbling inside aimlessly.

"For God's sake, pop," said Beau in a small voice.

"It's no use, Beau! There's no record of a marriage license. There's no record or trace of the justice of the peace who's supposed to have married you. If there is—let's have it. Produce him! And let's see your license and your marriage certificate! Why, even the address is a phony—it's a house that was just rented for one night! Otherwise it hasn't been occupied for years!"

Scenes flashed across Kerrie's brain . . . the ramshackle building, the weeds, the dust, the odd Mr. Johnston . . . .

Beau said miserably: "All right, it's true! We weren't married. It was an absolute phony. But Kerrie didn't know anything about that, pop! She thought it was on the level. I rigged the whole thing up myself, I tell you!"

She should have known; if she hadn't been such a blind, trusting fool . . . The marriage license. She hadn't signed. "Pull," he had said. He hadn't shown it to her. In that house, the "justice" was going to marry—marry!—them without a second witness. The whole thing, the whole sickening . . .

Kerrie's stomach began to churn. There was a wry twist to her mouth.

"Yes?" said the inspector flatly.

"You've got to believe me, pop! This thing is all a mess now. Margo Cole tried three times to kill Kerrie. She hated Kerrie because she—well, she'd taken a shine to me herself. And she was spending more dough than was coming in, and she wanted Kerrie's share of the income. She told me so herself! I'll swear to that on the witness stand! I played along, figuring that was the best way to protect Kerrie; we didn't have anything on Margo in the way of evidence, so there was no use pulling the law into it. Ellery knew all about this. He'll back me up."

"Don't bring Ellery into it!" thundered the inspector.

"I've got to, pop. Even if I didn't, he'd come to bat——"

"Does he know these things of his own knowledge?" demanded the old man quickly.

"No. I told him. But it's true, I tell you! I planned the fake marriage because, with Kerrie apparently married, Margo would temporarily get Kerrie's share, or expect to get it soon, so half her motive against Kerrie would be satisfied. The other half—well," and Beau threw back his shoulders defiantly, "I made a deal with her. I pretended to be her accomplice, saying I was marrying Kerrie to give Margo the extra income, so she and I could split. I told her I loved her, not Kerrie — that the marriage wouldn't mean a thing. She fell for it. Last night, like the she-devil she was, she couldn't resist coming down to crow over Kerrie after the damage, as she thought, was done."

Gans Funeral Service to Be Wednesday

Body Will Lie in State At Hebrew Congregation Chapel Tomorrow

Isaac Gans, civic leader and philanthropist, who died early yesterday, will lie in state throughout tomorrow in the chapel of the Washington Hebrew Congregation.

Now resting at Hysong's funeral home, the body will be taken to the chapel, 816 Eighth street northwest, at 10:30 a. m. tomorrow, where it will remain until 1 p. m. Wednesday. At 3 p. m. public services will be held in the temple.

Officiating at the rites will be Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld. The principal eulogy will be delivered by the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Episcopal Bishop of Washington.

Thousands of Washingtonians are expected to file past the flag-draped casket of Mr. Gans, who was beloved by District residents of every walk of life, and by his associates in a score of charities and public and private enterprises.

There will be no honorary pallbearers. It was Mr. Gans' wish that all of his local friends attend his funeral, that all consider themselves his honorary pallbearers.

Harry S. Wender, of the Woodward Building, who is in charge of funeral arrangements, asked The Post to aid in the notification of active pallbearers. These are to be selected from District residents who were aided in starting their careers through the late philanthropist's efforts.

Representatives of a number of veteran, youth and charitable organizations with which Mr. Gans was affiliated will be color bearers. These include the Metropolitan Police Department, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Salvation Army, Disabled Veterans of the World War, Societies of "40 and 8" and "8 and 40," Metropolitan Police Boys' Club, the Washington Boys' Club and St. John's Masonic Lodge.

Brief burial services will be held at the grave in Washington Hebrew Congregation Cemetery, at 1425 Alabama avenue southeast.

Ellis Parker, Jailed in Sequel To Lindbergh Kidnaping, Dies

Sleuth Convicted in Wendel Affair Was Prison Library Aide

By the Associated Press

Lewisburg, Pa., Feb. 4.—Ellis H. Parker, sr., former Burlington, N. J., County detective convicted of conspiracy in a sequel to the Lindbergh baby kidnaping, died today at the Federal Penitentiary here where he was serving a six-year sentence.

Death came about 3:30 a. m. Director James V. Bennett, of the Federal Prison Bureau at Washington, said the 68-year-old former officer, who built a notable career in the 44 years he was a rural sleuth, had been suffering from an organic cerebral condition.

He had been confined to the prison hospital for some time.

Parker and his son, Ellis, jr., were convicted in 1937 of conspiring to kidnap Paul H. Wendel, former Trenton, N. J., lawyer. The son was sentenced to three years.

The Government charged the elder Parker, in an effort to enhance his reputation as a super detective, plotted to seize Wendel and torture him into falsely confessing the Lindbergh baby kidnaping.

Parker produced Wendel's "confession"—subsequently repudiated and discredited by State officials—almost on the eve of the execution of Bruno Richard Hauptmann in Trenton. An investigation of it caused a three-day delay in the electrocution.

It was not until 1939—after two years of appeals—that the two Parkers began serving terms in the Federal prison here. No recourse had been left to them when the Supreme Court refused to intervene.

Parker lost his 15-room house in Mount Holly, N. J., by foreclosure, and was ousted from his post as chief of county detectives and suffered from declining health.

That he was still held in high esteem in Burlington County, however, was attested to by a petition bearing 8,000 signatures asking for Presidential clemency and later for a pardon.

After his commitment, he worked as a clerk in the prison library. In December of 1939 he became ill and was placed in the penitentiary hospital.

The Parkers and three co-defendants, Harry Weiss, Martin Schlossman and Murray Bleefeld, were indicted for kidnaping in Kings County (Brooklyn), but Gov. Hoffman, of New Jersey, refused extradition.

The Federal grand jury in Newark considered the case under the so-called Lindbergh law.

Rosenwald Memorial Held At Branch 'Y'

Service Here Is Part of National Tribute to Benefactor of Negro

Memorial services for Julius Rosenwald, incident to the annual Nation-wide commemoration of the life of this man of Hebrew faith, whose charities developed education of the Negro in Christian associations and colleges, were held yesterday at the Twelfth Street branch, Young Men's Christian Association.

William J. Trent, jr., advisor on Negro affairs, Department of the Interior, paid tribute to the wholesome philosophy back of Rosenwald's gifts, lauding especially the aid given rural education in the South through more than 5,000 Rosenwald schools, and through endowment of research.

"So moved was he by love of his fellow men," the speaker said, "that he was willing to share his good fortune with them, not on the basis of casual aid, but rather on the basis of planned development for the purpose of everlasting relief of the misfortunes of others."

He indicated that Mr. Rosenwald, through his aid, made possible the erection of 27 colored Young Men's Christian Association buildings and two buildings for the Young Women's Christian Association. He also developed a colored housing project in Chicago and established a $40,000,000 fund for educational, civic and charitable purposes.

W. Napoleon Rivers, professor of French at Miner Teachers' College, presided. Musical numbers were furnished by the "Y" coeducational chorus, headed by Miss Almira Streets. The committee in charge of the memorial exercises consisted of Mrs. Beatrice Butcher, Eugene Davidson, Dr. W. T. Grady, Col. West A. Hamilton, Dr. Jesse A. Keene, M. Grant Lucas, S. D. Matthews, W. L. Savoy, C. A. McCane and the Rev. Arthur D. Gray.

S. M. Vauclain, Industrialist, Is Dead at 83

Rose From Apprentice To Head of Baldwin Locomotive Works

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Feb. 4.—Samuel M. Vauclain, 83, chairman of the board of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, and one of the country's foremost industrialists, died today at his suburban Rosemont home after a long illness.

Death was ascribed to a complication of ailments. For about a year he had been in a hospital frequently and was unable to take an active part in the management of the company he had directed for 11 years.

Vauclain, who once estimated that he helped build 60,000 locomotives, started as an apprentice in a railroad shop at Altoona, Pa., at the age of 16.

During the World War he turned his inventive and executive ability to work that won him decorations from his own country, France, Italy and Poland. He was chairman of committees on the Council of National Defense.

As vice president of the Baldwin Works, he expanded its activities during the war to produce munitions. At peak production the firm's two plants at Eddystone, Pa., and Burnham, Pa., produced 12,000 rifles and 25,000 shells daily.

Vauclain, a super-salesman, often returned from Europe and South America with contracts running as high as $10,000,000.

Starting with Baldwin as an inspector, Vauclain worked his way up, becoming vice president in 1911. He was named president in 1919 and resigned that post 10 years later to become chairman of the board.

He was a member of the board of several banks and other industrial concerns and held honorary degrees from the University of Pennsylvania, Villanova College and Worchester Polytechnic Institute.

THE MUSICAL LADS. Shoreham. Barnee strikes up "Back Home in Indiana" whenever Mrs. Paul V. McNutt enters the Blue Room.

MATT WINDSOR, music master of the Anchor Room

Pall Mall Room. Marty Rubin reads regretfully out of his "little black book," but with Maestro Bert Bernath's eye upon him, he doesn't dare to sing from it.

Rainbow Room. Lew Berman, just to be different, is having indigestion instead of the popular cold. But "graveyard stew" (milk toast, y' know) seems to agree with him. He's drumming with the pep of a kid on Christmas morning.

Shar-Zad. Though Bill McCune has a big, shiny new car, he still looks sad when anyone mentions his previous bus which came out such a sad second best in an encounter with a green truck on the Furness Pier in New York.

"HELLO, DICK." That's what everyone says when they walk into Dick's Grill. For Proprietor Dick Ashby is the kind of restaurant owner whom all the customers call by his first name.

ROBIN HOOD DEVELOPMENTS. While the cozy new Robin Hood is already open (and doing a handsome business, thank you) the management is planning a vurra special-special "formal opening" February 8 or 9.

Miss Friedman To Be Buried Here Today

Services at 3 P. M. For Stenographer Who Plunged to Death

Services for Miss Mildred Friedman, 20, who died Saturday night two hours after falling from the tenth floor of the Mayflower Hotel, will be today at 3 p. m. at Chambers funeral home, Fourteenth and Chapin streets northwest. Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, yesterday issued a certificate of suicide in her death.

A note left in tiny fragments in the room from which Miss Friedman, a stenographer, plunged to her death was pieced together by detectives. They said it named a cemetery in which she wished to be buried, and called attention to a life insurance policy from which she asked that her funeral expenses be paid, the remainer to go to John J. Greer, a commercial artist whom she telephoned a few minutes before her fall.

Greer said Miss Friedman simply told him she would be unable to attend a party he had planned for tonight and gave no intimation of her intention. He was informed she had leaped from the window by the hotel management which had a record of her call to him.

F. S. Holbrook, U. S. Official, Expires at 53

Co-Chief of Weights, Measures Division at Bureau of Standards

Fay S. Holbrook, 53, co-chief of the Division of Weights and Measures of the Bureau of Standards, died yesterday morning at his home, 25 West Kirke street, Chevy Chase, Md.

A native of Albany, N. Y., Mr Holbrook was educated at Cornell University and Georgetown University Law School, from which he was graduated. He was a member of the District Bar.

Following his graduation from Cornell, Mr. Holbrook was appointed associate physicist of the Bureau of Standards. In this capacity he traveled extensively, establishing systems of weights and measures in several States and Puerto Rico.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Anna S. Holbrook, whom he married in 1918; two sons, Thomas S. and Henry S. Holbrook; a daughter, Miss Mary Louise Holbrook, and a sister, Miss Edna F. Holbrook, all of Washington.

Funeral services will be held at 11 a. m. tomorrow at the home. Burial will be in Troy, N. Y.

Mrs. Vandoren Dies in Baltimore Hospital at 70

Mrs. Alice Krager Vandoren, 70, widow of Theodore John Vandoren, and widely known in Maryland, died yesterday at Marine Hospital, Baltimore.

Mrs. Vandoren, who lived at 2726 Connecticut avenue northwest, was active in Democratic, religious and charitable endeavors in Hyattsville for more than 35 years prior to moving to Washington 5 years ago. She was a native of St. Jerome's Catholic Church, Hyattsville.

Her son, the late Lucian H. Vandoren, was chairman of the D. C. Boxing Commission, and a daughter, Angela, was the first wife of Dr. Thomas Parran, surgeon general of the U. S. Public Health Service.

Surviving children are: W. Thompson Vandoren, vice president of the Liberty National Bank; Theodore J. Vandoren, jr., and Miss Eleanor Vandoren, all of Washington; Bernard J. Vandoren, Dayton, Ohio, and Mrs. Ivor B. Watts, Nutley, N. J., and 17 grandchildren.

Funeral services will be held at 9:30 a. m. tomorrow at the residence, followed by requiem mass at 10 a. m. at St. Thomas Apostle Catholic Church. Burial will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Services Held For Rev. Cannon

Warrenton, Va., Feb. 4.—Funeral services were held this afternoon at the Warrenton Methodist Church for the Rev. Charles Herbert Cannon, 66, the pastor, who died Friday night. Burial will be in Spring Hill Cemetery at Easton, Md., tomorrow afternoon.

Born at Easton, he was the son of Charles David Cannon, an Eastern Shore farmer and veterinarian. He was ordained in 1895, and served in the Baltimore Conference for 45 years with churches in Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland.

Charles Duvall Funeral to Be Held Tomorrow

Funeral services for Charles Raymond Duvall, scientist and author, who died Saturday at his home, 632 D street northeast, will be held at 10 a. m. tomorrow at St. James Episcopal Church. Burial will be in Congressional Cemetery.

Mr. Duvall, a native of Clarke County, Va., attended the University of West Virginia, from which he was graduated in 1891. He did post-graduate work in mathematics and physics at Johns Hopkins University. He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Phi Kappa Psi social fraternity.

A computer with the U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey from 1899 to 1913, Mr. Duvall afterward served as computer for the department of terrestrial magnetism of the Carnegie Institution, until his retirement in 1937.

He was co-author of "Triangulation in California," Coast and Geodetic Survey publication in 1911, and a contributor to the Journal of Terrestrial Magnetism and Atmospheric Electricity.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Carrie Opie Duvall; a daughter, Mrs. Virginia Coleman, of Alexandria, and five sons, the Rev. Lindsay O. Duvall, of Carnegie, Pa.; Charles, of Arlington, Va., and Edwin, Raymond and William Duvall, all of this city.

Mrs. Greenberg, Wife of Jeweler, Dies; Rites Today

Mrs. Josephine Greenberg, 43, died yesterday at her home, 5614 Fifth street northwest.

Mrs. Greenberg was the wife of Harry Greenberg, manager of a jewelry store. She was a member of the Temple chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, and the Jewish War Veterans, Ladies Auxiliary.

Surviving, besides her husband, are her mother, Mrs. Leah Steiner; a daughter, Miss Maxine Betty Greenberg; three sisters, Mrs. Wilson, Mrs. Robert Scheick and Mrs. Charles Krulebich and three brothers, Louis L., Morton and Herman Steiner.

The funeral will be at 1:30 p. m today at Danzansky's funeral home. Burial will be in Ohev Sholem Cemetery.
